The Banner Says...

Dunblane's golden son

by Sean Cairney

or many and certainly for those in Scotland, the grip of winter is well and truly on. Those cold days and dark nights can get to you after a while, leaving many to wonder when will it end. I grew up around snow and ice and remember longing for sunshine and warmth and no month did that ring truer than February. It may be the shortest month of the year, but it often felt the worst for the winter chill.

Andy Murray

Of course, for those on the other side of the Equator things are very different. As we go to press the Australian Open is on with days forecast close to 40°C (or 104°F) making some crave a "driech" cool Scottish winter's day. Speaking of the Australian Open many tennis fans around the world were left saddened and shocked that Scottish tennis superstar Andy Murray admitted his body is in pain every day, and he is even struggling to put on his socks and walk the dogs-never mind play elite tennis.

Murray has certainly done
Scotland proud on the world stage with a career that has seen him being a US Open champion, double Wimbledon champion, double Olympic gold medallist, 11 Grand Slam finals, a former world number one just to name a few. Murray has done so much for the sport and today is Dunblane's most famous son.

A gold post box honouring the first of Murray's two historic Olympic triumphs takes pride of place in the High Street of the town which sits just outside of Stirling.

The Dunblane native narrowly escaped the 1996 school shooting tragedy at Dunblane Primary School. Sixteen children were murdered along with their teacher on 13 March, 1996 when a gunman broke into the gymnasium and began shooting at a class of five- and six-year-olds. The young Murray, then eight, and his brother Jamie, two years older, were in the school at the time and were on their way to the gymnasium when shots rang out. No doubt Andy's close call with evil has left him deeply affected, and thankfully the incident is still today the only mass shooting at a UK school.

In this issue

There certainly is something about Mary at the moment, with Mary Queen of Scots on the lips of many people around the world.

A new international film release has certainly put the spotlight on one of the icons of Scottish history. It is another example of just how the story of Scotland needs no script as the history of this dynamic nation is so compelling and we feature some just how this latest film is helping Scotland tell her story to the world.

Planning a trip to Scotland?
I would imagine a castle, distillery or taking in the amazing outdoors are in order. What about going to prison? Some may be interested to learn that Scotland has its very own prison attraction. HM Convict Prison Peterhead once housed Scotland's most hardened inmates and now tourists can visit their cells and here the stories of both the prisoners and guards on just what it was like to live one of the North East' most infamous places.

Resting on the steep north shore of Loch Awe sits the incredible St Conan's Kirk. This church was built by the love of son for his mother and used his unique and creative styles of design to create a building that would most likely never today be made. Walter Campbell used granite from nearby Cruachan and the wooden beams for the roof are believed to have been taken from old wooden battleships that had recently been broken up, creating an amazing piece of architecture. Now a grant is helping St Conan's not only continue to be a place of worship but also for weddings and events so that even more people can take in one of Scotland's most unique buildings.

Love of Scotland

This is also a month of love with St Valentine's Day on February 14th. I hope on the 14th you honour someone or something you love. Your family, pet or simply your love of Scotland. A land that continues to tell its tale with pride.

Andy Murray has said he hopes his tennis success has helped his home town, a town he loves, recover from the school shooting ordeal that will forever be part of his life. I am sure his success has helped and more, as Dunblane and Scotland can forever be proud of Murray who has taken the tennis world by storm, yet never forgot where he is from. Whether Andy continues to play or not he will always be Dunblane's golden son.

Is there something about Scotland you love? Share your story with us by email, post, social media or at www.scottishbanner.com/contact-us tone carvings which had lain hidden for centuries have been discovered at Dunkeld Cathedral in Perthshire.

600-year-old stone carvings discovered at Dunkeld Cathedral

Recent works at Dunkeld Cathedral have revealed previously unseen features.

A routine inspection of the site by Historic Environment Scotland's (HES) Conservation team led to the discovery of at least a dozen unrecorded carved saint-like figures.

The tomb of Bishop Cardeny
The torch-lit discovery within the obscured recesses of the tomb of Bishop Cardeny, which dates from 1420, was followed by a second, more in-depth assessment undertaken using cutting-edge 3D photogrammetric technology. A detailed 3D model was created by obtaining multiple images using cameras and mirrors, enabling a closer look at the carvings which had been previously hidden from direct view.

Bishop Cardeny was the longest serving Bishop of Dunkeld Cathedral, made Bishop by Pope Benedict VIII In 1399. Not unusually, the tomb was created before his death, in this case 17 years before. The unearthing of these stone carvings has shed new light on the history of the site, revealing that the tomb has at some point been moved and built into the wall from its original free-standing location.

An important ecclesiastical centre Colin Muir, Stone Conservator at HES who led the discovery, said: "The discovery of these rare, hidden carvings behind the 15th century tomb of Bishop Cardeny is very exciting, and will enrich our understanding of the history of Dunkeld Cathedral and late medieval stone carving. This discovery also gives fresh incentive for further research and exploration of the site, as we still don't know when exactly the tomb was moved, or why. This discovery also hints that there may still be other obscured areas of detail preserved within the walls behind the tomb.

Conservation works to protect the fabric of the tomb are currently being planned, and we hope to undertake further investigation of what may lie behind it. At this stage we don't know what, if anything, remains - but it will be fascinating to find out."

Dunkeld Cathedral is one of over 300 Historic Scotland properties across the country managed by HES. The site of the cathedral has long been an important ecclesiastical centre, with relics of St Columba brought to Dunkeld from Iona by King Kenneth McAlpin in 849. The cathedral was developed over a period of around 250 years, which the earliest surviving section – the choir – dating from the late 1200s.

SCOT POURRI

Send us your inquiries on life's little question marks.

Ever wanted to know what happened to your old pal from home, how to make your favourite Scottish meal, or wondered about a certain bit of Scottish history?

My favourite Scottish castle

It's difficult to choose a favourite castle as they are all beautiful in their own way, the derelict ones would have so much to tell if they could only talk, if it's a Scottish castle I love it!! I can't leave Tulloch Castle and room 8's friendly?? ghost. My daughter and I stayed there twice and he made his presence known both times. I was interested in the oystercatcher on the back page, in Australia they are called a pied oystercatcher and we also have a black one, the sooty oystercatcher. They both live right around the Australian coast. If I can get close enough I'll try to hear their calls, perhaps they'll say "g'day mate!" I'm really enjoying this month's issue and must try to locate the Outlaw King as I know that I will enjoy it. Google will get a workout.

A very Happy New Year to your staff and readers. Jocelyn Layton Wyndham, Western Australia

Up Helly Aa

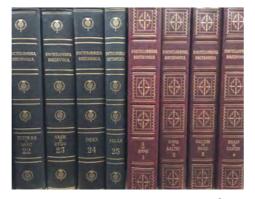

It was wonderful to read about the unique Up Helly Aa event in the Shetland Islands (Scottish Banner, January, 2019). What a wonderful celebration of Viking heritage, a heritage many assume only belongs to Scandinavia. I have been to Shetland but never in winter and this event is certainly something to consider. Your January issue also had some very interesting and varied content and helps us reader fall in love with Scotland more each month.

Wishing all the writers, staff and readers of the Scottish Banner a wonderful 2019 ahead. Sue Anderson Toronto, Ontario Canada

Ed note: Thanks Sue for your note and Scotland really does have a great variety of events year round and everyone is welcome!

Encyclopaedia Britannica

How fascinating to read about the 250th anniversary of Encyclopedia Britannica. I remember growing up with a volume of these in our house and it was the "go to" for information. This of course was way before Google or the internet existed! I however never knew until reading this article that it was in fact started by Scots, as I always and wrongly assumed it was started in England. Scots never cease to amaze me on their ingenuity and lust for further knowledge and education.

Perhaps that is why I became a teacher??!

Alan Sinclair

USA

Ed note: Thanks for your note Alan and Encyclopedia Britannica is certainly a literary icon, which is still teaching people new things today.

Oliver Cromwell

This may be of interest to Mrs Beverley Mason who wrote regarding Oliver Cromwell. There is a book by Richard Lee Bradshaw, called God's Battle Axe about John Bradshawe who was Oliver Cromwells' Attorney General for four years and is called the Regicide Judge as he signed the death warrant for Charles the First.

Both Richard and I are related to him! Robert Bradshaw Ashwood, Victoria Australia

Robert Burns songs and poems I am seeking your kind assistance and support in helping me find a lost treasure (I think I was silly enough to loan it to some body and they never bothered to return it.

It's a smallish (pocket book) approximately 25 cm x 15 cm and has a reddish tartan cover with a photo of our Bard in the middle.

I am led to believe it may have been called "The Kirkaldy Edition"

I have been to so many book shops and can tell you am utterly amazed and disgusted they don't know what I am talking about or it's maybe they just don't care.

Can anyone put any light on where/how I can replace it?

If successful please include in next moths edition of our most valued Scottish Banner.

Kind Regards, R Adam Ainslie Email: agands1@bigpond.com

Many thanks, Janet Sinclair New Zealand Email: jansinclair5@gmail.com

Great Scottish products
Just a brief note to let you know my order of two books and a DVD arrived safely this morning. I am very pleased to have the DVD as I attended the Edinburgh Tattoo when

Research on the enduring appeal of Mary Queen of Scots

he was a Queen who only reigned for six years. Yet more than four centuries after her death, Mary Queen of Scotland continues to polarise opinion and to hold a fascination for the general public.

Now a project led by the University of Glasgow brings together some 40 academics and curators to help understand how her legend has impacted on Scottish society and culture in the intervening years. For more than 400 years, Mary's legend has been depicted in popular culture and immortalised in music, books, plays, art and on coins and medals. And since 1895, the extraordinary life and death of the sixteenth-century queen continues to be told and retold on the big screen.

The latest film, Mary Queen of Scots, centres on the royal rivalry between Mary (played by Saoirse Ronan) and her cousin Elizabeth I (Margot Robbie).

A source of fascination and debate

Dr Steven Reid, a Scottish Historian based at the University of Glasgow's College of Arts, and Anne Dulau-Beveridge, a curator at The Hunterian have been awarded funding for a twoyear research network project on Mary from the Royal Society of Edinburgh.

Dr Reid said: "Our project will look at what is it about Mary's life and her story that gives it such appeal and endurance - why does she remain such a source of fascination and debate? Why do historians, authors and artists continue to re-imagine her? To date, there have only been a handful of works exploring Mary's posthumous reputation. This project will undertake a detailed and holistic assessment of Mary's reputation and depiction in popular culture, from the end of her personal reign in Scotland through to the present.

"It will focus on objects held in Scottish archives and national collections. Through this corpus, it aims to explore and understand how Mary has been remembered and what the changing representations of Mary tell us about evolving attitudes to gender, monarch and religion as well as Scotland's own perceptions of its history."

Objects about Mary

Already the University of Glasgow team have found hundreds of objects about Mary in its own Archives, Special Collections and Hunterian collections. This includes a rare medal commemorating the marriage of Mary to Lord Darnley in 1565 and a Mary Queen of Scots Thirty-Shilling Piece from 1555 (Mary's coinages were the first to feature portraits of a female monarch).

Another key piece in the University's Archives is a letter of gift (dated 13 July 1563) from Mary, offering much-needed financial support in the form of land grants and endowments to the university. The installation of a Scottish Protestant parliament in 1560 and the disintegration of Catholicism jeopardised the University's very existence, and Mary's grant played an important role in keeping the University solvent through this difficult period in its history.

One of the key Queen Mary pieces in The Hunterian's collection is a romanticised painting by Gavin Hamilton (1723-1798) called The Abdication of Mary, Queen of Scots. This painting inspired the University of Glasgow to look more indepth at Mary's posthumous reputation.

Interest in the life of the Oueen

Ms Dulau-Beveridge said: "This project grew from a simple idea to explore the making and meaning of the depiction of Mary Queen of Scots by Gavin Hamilton. The painting was commissioned by James Boswell, the 18thcentury author and biographer. And in fact Boswell and Hamilton corresponded for more than 10 years to decide on which sources should be used to help with the depiction of Mary on canvas. I think both were aware of the importance the painting would acquire in later years, as it was the first history painting depicting the life of Mary."

She added: "It soon became apparent that this commission was only one sign of a renewal of interest in the life of the Queen in 18th century Britain. This included The Hunterian's own founder Dr William Hunter who gathered key texts about Mary. This led to discussions with colleagues across the University and the result was to take this further and look at Mary's reputation and depiction in popular culture. Already this project has borne fruit to show that the University owns one of the most significant collections of Mary Queen of Scots materials in Scotland. We are now looking forward to seeing what other interesting facts and finds that this new research, generously supported by The Royal Society of Edinburgh, will uncover."

The areas that the project will look at over the next two years include:

- The noticeable absence of Mary from Jacobite memorialisation;
- The collection and consultation of Mary memorabilia by famous intellectuals including William Hunter, Sir Walter Scott, and George Washington;
- · The explosion in eighteenth/nineteenthcentury engravings of Mary, featuring wildly varying portraits;
- The industry of Mary Queen of Scots rings produced in the 1820s;
- The Victorian mania in the 19th century for formal staged photographs of young women as Mary and her attendants. A collection of which are housed in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery.

From this project, a dedicated exhibition on the memorialisation of Mary will be hosted at The Hunterian in Glasgow in 2022.

Mary Stuart's timeline:

- Mary Stuart is born in December 1542 in Linlithgow Palace just a week before the death of her father James V of Scotland.
- She is taken to France in 1548 to be the bride of the Dauphin, the young French price, in order to secure a Catholic alliance against England.
- · During this time Scotland is ruled by a series of regents, including Mary's own mother Marie de Guise.
- In December 1560, Mary's husband (now King Francis II and still in his teens) dies after a year on the French throne.
- Mary returns to Scotland in 1561 to exercise direct rule as Queen of Scots.
- In 1565 she marries her cousin, Henry Stuart, Lord Darnley.
- On 19 June 1566, at Edinburgh Castle, Mary gives birth to her son James (the future James VI).
- · Lord Darnley is murdered at Kirk O'Field in February 1567.
- In April 1567, Mary is abducted by James Hepburn, fourth earl Bothwell. They are married the following month.
- In July 1567, Mary is forced to abdicate in favour of her one-year-old son James VI of Scotland.
- In 1568, after an unsuccessful attempt to regain the throne, Mary flees to England seeking the protection of her cousin Elizabeth I.
- In England, Mary is held in captivity for 18 years before she is executed at Fotheringhay Castle in 1587, aged 44.
- Mary's son James VI of Scotland becomes James I of England in 1603.

Scotspeak is a selection of quotes which made headlines in Scotland last month on a variety of current Scottish affairs.

"As we welcome in the New Year, today in Stornoway we rightly look back 100 years and remember those lost on the Iolaire - a tragedy that involved so many, so close to shore and, for most of the men, so close to home. We reflect on those who perished and how survivors, family, friends and the wider communities on Lewis, Harris and Berneray must have felt. It may have been a century ago but the legacy of the Iolaire will never be forgotten. I was honoured to be part of the commemorations and meet descendants."

First Minister Nicola Sturgeon said at the 100 year commemoration service of the HMY Iolaire, which was carrying soldiers returning from World War One when it smashed into rocks near the Isle of Lewis during the early hours of January 1, 1919. More than 200 men died and the Iolaire tragedy remains one of the worst UK maritime disasters of the 20th century.

"This additional funding is fantastic news and will help us to safeguard the incredible heritage assets of Scotland's canals for future generations to enjoy.

These 200-year-old waterways play a vital role in local communities and Scotland as a whole, contributing to the marine economy; attracting tourists, visitor spend and investment; as well as stimulating job creation and business growth. While managing these historic assets is not without its challenges, we are committed to continuing to work with the Scottish Government and our partners to ensure they continue to deliver benefits for all the people of Scotland."

Catherine Topley, Scottish Canals chief executive, said as an additional £5.35m in funding has been granted by the Scottish Government to undertake critical works on two historic Scottish canals. Work on the Caledonian Canal, which connects Inverness with the west coast at Corpach near Fort William, and on the Union Canal, which runs from Falkirk to Edinburgh, commenced in January.

"How is it possible that a sacred and historic Scottish heritage site like Culloden Battlefield, do not get the respect they deserve. It urgently needs to be in peace for our Scottish heritage, the brave fallen and of course our future generations. It is still a pilgrimage place for many."

Protester Patricia Robertson said she was highly concerned about the protection of the Culloden Battlefield in the Highlands. Developer Kirkwood Homes' sales office for its 16-home Viewhill development, is within the Culloden Moor Conservation Area and some 300 yards to the north east of the famous battlefield.

"My Parkinson's is not going to go away and it's going to get worse, my life is slipping away. There is no denying it, I am 75, I have got Parkinson's and I am at the wrong end of the telescope of life. I am at the point where the yesteryears mean more than the yesterdays. Because it is back there in my childhood and youth when I go to all those things that made me that live keenest in my memory now."

Scottish comedian Sir Billy Connolly said whilst filming a BBC documentary Made In Scotland. Connolly, also known as The Big Yin, has Parkinson's disease and has had to cut down work due to his health. The celebrated actor and comedian soon after apologised to fans for being morbid and said his time was still not up.

"Once again we have brought together the best pies and baked goods in the land and today we can really celebrate the achievement of our hard working butchers and bakers. My heartfelt congratulations go to our world champion, and indeed everyone today taking away a prize, they are all winners in my book."

Ronnie Miles, president of Scottish Bakers as The Little Bakery in Dumfries has been crowned winners at this years World Scotch Pie Championships. The World Championship Scotch Pie Awards was launched in 1999 by proud butcher and baker Alan Stuart with an aim to focus on quality and innovation. "This is a rare opportunity for us to bring a whole mountain under our care. It already supports a magnificent area of ancient Caledonian pinewood and a temperate rainforest of native birchwood. Perhaps even more exciting is the potential to manage these within a mosaic of their natural neighbours. Our aim is to see native woodland, montane scrub and open moorland habitats meshing naturally with each other from sea to sky. That would encapsulate all that a restored landscape can be, not just in Torridon but across the Highlands."

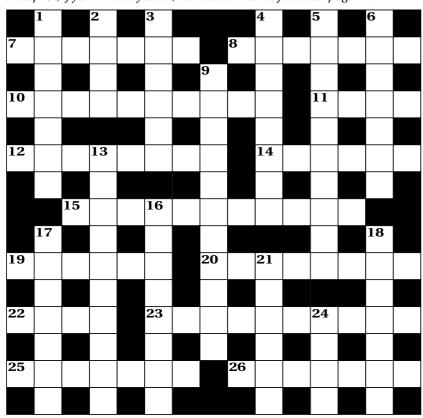

Carol Evans, Woodland Trust Scotland director, said as the conservation charity has launched a £1.6m fundraising drive to buy a Ben Shieldaig mountain in the Highlands. The mountain covers around 4000 acres set in the dramatic Torridon landscape within the Wester Ross National Scenic Area and is rich in wildlife and ancient Caledonian pinewood.

"As we don't have a pool on Fair Isle, for the kids to be able to learn to swim we simply have to fly to the nearest pool. About 50% of our lessons that we plan don't happen as the weather often sees our flights get cancelled at short notice. It's not the smoothest journey from Fair Isle to Tingwall – in the summer there can be too much fog to fly and in the winter too much wind. So we just have to be flexible. We always over pack, for example, because we can't take it as a given that if we do make it to the mainland we'll be able to get back."

Fair Isle school teacher Ruth Stout said as her students must fly from the Fair Isle to Shetland for swimming lessons. As the island has no pools the children from Fair Isle Primary School take the 25 minute flight for swim lessons. The Fair Isle is home to 60 people and is the most geographically remote inhabited island in the United Kingdom.

Glass milk bottles making a comeback across the UK are rethinking how they get their milk delivered as many are making a switch from plastic to glass. Once finished glass milk bottles are returned to the dairy, they are washed out and refilled to be delivered again. This stops hundreds of plastic bottles being used which only have a single life-span. Diaries across Scotland, England and Wales are all seeing a change in customer habits. Director of Kerr's Family Dairy in Dundee, Kelvin Kerr said: "Attitudes have changed in the way people use plastic. I think it's because there's a lot of stuff on TV about how plastic can damage the environment. Milk is a household need so by switching your plastic to glass it's a good way to start helping the environment."

Thomsons Diary in Lanarkshire has seen a 7% increase in demand for glass since last year.

Milk deliveries however have been in steady decline since the 1980's and doorstep accounts for just 3% of the market, in 1970 almost 99% of milk would have been door-delivered. The UK's five big supermarkets say they have no plans to start stocking milk in glass bottles.

Pictish symbol stone discovered in Aberdeen rare Pictish symbol stone has been discovered on the banks of the River Don in Dyce, Aberdeen. The river's low water level, resulting from the recent sustained spell of warm and dry weather, led to the unearthing of the stone which had become partially exposed from the river bank. Survey and removal of the stone was coordinated by teams from Historic Environment Scotland (HES), Aberdeenshire Council and The University of Aberdeen, which confirmed the stone to be a Class I Pictish symbol stone - an unworked stone with carved symbols including a triple disc with cross bar, a mirror, and a notched rectangle with two internal spirals.

Kirsty Owen, Deputy Head of Archaeology at HES, said: "We're very excited by this find, made all the more remarkable by the brief window of opportunity we had to recover the stone before the water levels rose again.

AOC Archaeology, our emergency call off contractors, worked with a specialist lifting company to carefully and safely remove the stone from the river. This is a wonderful example of a local authority, university, national body and commercial archaeological company working together to save a significant piece of Scotland's archaeological heritage."

Among Scotland's most distinctive monuments

Pictish symbol stones are among Scotland's most distinctive monuments. Their elegant and vivid symbols and images can be found carved into boulders and slabs of rock, and on specially cut and shaped free-standing stones. Class I Pictish stones date to between 6th to 8th centuries AD, and are typically unworked stones with carved symbols. The meaning of the symbols is debated, but it is believed they may represent the names of individuals or groups. This new discovery is one of a number of impressive finds in the northeast of Scotland, which include an early Pictish stone now on display at the Church of St. Fergus, Dyce, close to where the new find was unearthed.

Bruce Mann, Local Authority
Archaeologist for Aberdeen and Aberdeenshire, said: "The exceptional summer has led to river levels being at their lowest for decades, so there was always a chance that something new would be found. However, I certainly didn't expect a find as stunning as this. Pictish symbolstones are incredibly rare, and this one, with its apparent connection to the river, adds further to the discussions around their meaning and what they were used for."

Europe's 'lost people'

The Picts are one of Europe's 'lost people', chiefly known for their elaborately decorated memorial stones found throughout eastern Scotland, from Shetland to the Firth of Forth. Gordon Noble, Head of Archaeology at the University of Aberdeen, is currently leading a major research project into the early medieval Kingdoms of northern Scotland and Ireland. He said: "The distinctive set of symbols carved into the stone meant we were quickly able to identify it as belonging to the Pictish tradition. Although there is a corpus of more than 200 of these stones across Scotland, each one is unique and this is a fantastic example which enables us to fill some of the gaps in the record and helps us to trace the development of literacy in north-east Scotland. As such, it is a very significant find."

The Lord Provost of Aberdeen, Barney Crockett, said: "This is a fantastic find and another great offshoot of the marvellous summer we have been enjoying. The Pictish symbol stone is yet another example of how lucky we are in Aberdeen in having such amazing history on our doorstep".

The stone has now been reported to the Crown Office's Treasure Trove Unit, and temporarily moved to Edinburgh while discussions on where it will be permanently housed are ongoing.

Orkney tidal turbine breaking energy generation records

The turbine generated more electricity in its first year than the entire of Scotland's wave and tidal energy sector in the 12 years before.

he revolutionary Scotrenewables SR2000 turbine turns previous designs on their head.

That's because, rather than having turbines fitted to the sea bed, the turbine blades are suspended beneath a floating platform.

This not only dramatically cuts installation costs, but also reduces the amount of time and money needed to maintain and service the machinery through simplifying accessibility.

Incredibly, the energy generated equates to more in 12 months from this single turbine than the entire wave and tidal energy sector has done in Scotland in the 12 years preceding the launch of this turbine.

The SR2000 turbine was installed in the Fall of Warness tidal races, Orkney in August 2017 and the team at Scotrenewables said their success is evidence that tidal power generation could be rolled out more widely. This is because it's estimated that the seas around the UK could one day be capable of generating 20% of its electricity needs.

Scotland's remarkable marine energy resource

The European Marine Energy Centre (Emec) is a test centre in Orkney where more than 30 different devices have been tested since it was established in 2003. However, the 64m long SR2000 has so far proved to be the most successful of them all. It has regularly generated the equivalent of 7% of Orkney's electricity demand, but can power up to 25%, at certain times.

Jonathan Lindsay, Operations and Technology Director at EMEC, said: "Wind energy has had about 50 years from when it first started, whereas wave and tidal has really only been over the last 10 years or so and has actually made quite a lot of progress in that time. As we move forward we will see bigger and better machines coming along."

This amazing milestone for the tidal energy industry really demonstrates the untapped potential of this emerging renewables sector. Scotland's remarkable marine energy resource has placed us front and centre in developing this industry with global potential.

As Scotland continues to embrace and lead the way towards a wholly renewable electricity system, it's more important than ever that we have a diverse range of renewable electricity sources. We've already seen huge growth in onshore wind and offshore wind over recent years and this new milestone from a tidal energy turbine is another welcome addition to an ever-increasingly important sector.

anuary has passed us by, along with things such as New Year's celebrations, salutes to Rabbie Burns as well as most of New Year's resolutions and the annual January 1st to January 3rd diet, so on to February. February 1st is the day of Saint Brigid. She was a 5thcentury nun who was reputedly born in Ireland in 439. It is also falling on the old Celtic pagan day of Imbolc which marked the days of the lambing an equivalent of Spring.

February 14th the other big event of the month with St. Valentine's name after Christian martyr of the fourth century and I am not sure how he became associated with romantic love.

Scots Day Out - A great gathering of Scottish diaspora

cottish diaspora organisations will create Clan Central at Scots Day Out in Bendigo's Rosalind Park on Saturday 2 March the place to discover your heritage and connect with many Australian organisations linked around the world for sharing information on Scottish families and their history.

Scots Day Out has become one of the largest diaspora gatherings and already more than a dozen clans and organisations have registered to be part of the free day in the centre of the city.

Among the clans will be MacLean, Sinclair, Sutherland, MacLeod, Donald, MacDonald, Fraser, MacPherson, MacMillan and MacLennan. And they will be joined by Victorian Scottish Union, the Burns Club and the Gaelic Society celebrating the history and heritage of Scotland. Clans will carry their banners in the parade down View St at 10am before sharing stories and activities in Clan Central throughout the day.

Scots Day Out takes place at Bendigo's Rosalind Park on March 2nd. For details see: www.scotsdayout.com back to a John Laing born in 1670. This is a considerable genealogical feat.

Laing is an old Anglo-Saxon descriptive name for someone who was tall in stature equivalent to modern day long. Over the centuries it may have been found to be recorded as Lang depending on the whim of the officiating recording clerk or local dialect. It was recorded as early as 1357 in Scotland primarily in Dumfriesshire.

Lang is listed as being associated with Clan Leslie, but the Laing form is listed as an armigerous clan, a term means that it is a family or clan that is without a chief. Such a descriptive name would be very common and found in all parts of Scotland, so it would be difficult from to tell from where any family with this particular name stemmed.

There is a Laing clan badge. It is a dove with a sprig of olive in its beak. The motto is: Mercy is my desire.

There more than few different Laing tartans, to see them best to search on the internet under "tartan finder."

McCrombie

Again, from Australia Mr. Ron Fyfe of Macleod, Victoria, wrote and asked about the surname McCrombie. I had a heck of a time trying to find any listings for the name in any of my resource literature. It is fairly prolific in familysearch.org where it can be found primarily in the North East of Scotland. So, I am going to go out in a limb and suggest that it is the combination of two known names, Crombie and McCombie. Both have different origins and one can see where the two could be combined. MacCombie from Tomaidh Mor meaning "great Tommy". The clan is listed today as Clan MacThomas.

Throughout our history the church has been a mainstay within the communities of Scotland. People's association with church gave them surnames that have come down to us today.

Crombie is from a place name in Aberdeenshire in the parish of Auchterless. It originates from the Gaelic word "crom" meaning crooked or bent. This could for a bend in the river or the road.

From White Plains, New York in the USA comes a query from Don Drummond asking about the surname Little. Little, as a descriptive name can be what exactly what it implies for a person of small stature.

It can also be for standing within a family to be used by one of two people who have the same name. Therefore, John Little would explain that one John is the junior of his father also named John.

It was not unusual to hear something similar in Scottish households of the past, where father and son shared the same name and would known as big Jim and wee Jim even when the son towered over his father on reaching adulthood.

Little was also used as a humorous application for one who was tall or corpulent.

There is the land name Liddesdale in Roxborough that evolved into the surname Liddell. It wouldn't be unconceivable that the names were often interchanged depending the clerk who was writing the documentation over the centuries.

There is a Clan Little Society at www. clanlittlesna.com for further research.

Church

Throughout our history the church has been a mainstay within the communities of Scotland. The pre-Reformation Roman Catholic church held lands much like feudal lords which gave them an income from the lands benefited the diocese as well the contributions to the Vatican. People's association with church gave them surnames that have come down to us today. Scots Inglis name for church was pronounced kirk. From this came such names as Kirk, Kirkby. There are a few places in Northern England by this name. These areas would have been in the Danelaw, a place where Vikings settled in north east England. The ending "by" is from Old Danish for farm so Kirkby translates as church farm. The other examples are Kirkwood, Kirkdale, which are self explanatory. Kirkman differs in that is an occupation for one who managed a church.

Similarly, in England the form Church shows up in many forms, such as Church, Churchman, Churchyard and more famously Churchill.

Eccles as a surname has two meanings, one from the Old English ish "aec laes" meaning oak pasture but to our theme, also from "ekklesia" meaning church. An example of the latter is Ecclefechan, a Brythonic (Old Welsh associated language) is a small village in the southwest of Scotland meaning small church.

Gillanders

This is just an elementary list of names that evolved from just the name church, there so many other associated names that comes from occupations or associations with the church such as Pope, Bishop, Preistley, Deakin (Deacon) Parson, Monk, Monkman, Prior, Abbot and Nunn just to mention a few. Revered figures added to that list as well such as Saint names especially in Gaelic names that start with either "gil" or "kil". Names such as Gillanders or Gilchrist are translated as the servant or devotee of Saint Andrew or servant or devotee of Christ. Other names such as Kilpatrick or Kilbride in Gaelic refer to the church of St. Patrick and St. Bridget respectively.

Reports confirm importance of Orkney's seas to waterbirds

he importance of Orkney's seas for wintering waterbirds, including ducks, divers, grebes and shags, has been highlighted in a report survey by Scottish Natural Heritage (SNH).

The surveys covered the Scapa Flow proposed Special Protection Area (pSPA) and the North Orkney pSPA. The population estimates for the species surveyed were the highest yet recorded, totalling over 11,460 birds in North Orkney and 9,680 birds in Scapa Flow.

The surveys confirm the international importance of these waters to wintering waterbirds indicated by previous surveys, dating back as far as the 1970s. In fact, the work found that Orkney holds more than 40% of great northern divers, Slavonian grebes and long-tailed ducks wintering in Great Britain.

A special place for wildlife
Sally Thomas, SNH's Director of People & Nature, said: "Orkney is a special place for wildlife, including wintering waterbirds. These surveys vividly illustrate how important Orkney's seas are to these birds, some of which migrate long distances from breeding grounds in Northern Europe to winter here.
It's remarkable that more than 40% of some of waterbirds overwintering in Britain are found in Orkney waters."

Other marine birds recorded in high numbers included common eider and redbreasted merganser, with more than 10% of their GB populations. North Orkney also held nearly 10% of the GB population of velvet scoters and Scapa Flow 7% of blackthroated divers. Over 6,000 European shags were counted as well, representing 6% of the GB population and over 3% of the Northern European population.

The surveys included five complete counts of North Orkney pSPA and four of Scapa Flow pSPA between November 2017 and March 2018. The surveys were mainly done from the shore with additional boatbased counts in central Scapa Flow; they were the first surveys to fully cover both sites by these methods in a single season.

| Leadership changes for Clan MacLeod

t their 2018 World Parliament on The Isle of Skye the Clan MacLeod Society elected Peter Macleod as their new President. The official Worldwide Society, called The Associated Clan MacLeod Societies (ACMS) has branches in ten countries, Australia, Canada,
England, France, Germany, New Zealand,
Scotland, South Africa, Switzerland and USA.
Over 300 MacLeods attended the Parliament representing all member countries.

Peter is the first Australian elected to the position and the third from outside the UK. Previously Peter has served as Australia's National Co-ordinator representing that country to the ACMS and also as President of the Clan Society in New South Wales. His interests include MacLeod legends and history producing two DVDs and a number of small books on the subject.

Alex McLeod

Australia's new National Co-ordinator is Alex McLeod of the Clan MacLeod Society in South Australia. Alex has been involved with the Clan Society for some 25 years including 14 as Secretary. He has attended Clan MacLeod Parliaments and a MacLeod World Gathering in Christchurch, NZ. Alex and wife Heidi have three daughters, Tess, Megan and Bronwyn who have also attended various four yearly MacLeod Parliaments since 2006. Bronwyn has been Co-ordinator for the ACMS Young MacLeod Programme since 2010.

Alex was appointed as Interim Australian National Co-ordinator at the Clan Parliament in 2018 and confirmed in the position by a subsequent election held by Australia's four regional Clan MacLeod Societies.

Alex has made a significant contribution to known MacLeod history in Australia with his studies of the Macleods of Raasay as pioneers in South Australia. He has identified their original land holdings in the Tatiara, Bordertown and MacLaren Vale districts before the family moved to Tasmania.

Outdoors visits at record high record levels in Scotland, a new survey suggests. Research from Scottish Natural Heritage (SNH) reveals that an estimated 547 million outdoors visits were made in 2017/18. The figure is up from 396 million in 2013/14 and is the highest ever recorded.

Scotland's People and Nature Survey

Scotland's People and Nature Survey shows that people are also getting out and about more regularly and enjoying nature closer to home. More than half (57%) said they ventured out weekly, up from 50% in 2013/14 when the survey was last carried out. Meanwhile the proportion of visits taken in urban areas increased by 6 percentage points to 40%.

Local parks were the most popular destination, while walking remains the most frequently used mode of transport. Exercising a dog was the most frequently cited reason for visiting the outdoors (42% of visits) followed by health and exercise (37%) and to relax and unwind (29%). The majority of those who visited the outdoors (67%) strongly agreed it had helped them de-stress, 64% said it had improved their physical health and 52% said they felt closer to nature.

However, the survey of around 12,000 adults in Scotland shows there is still more to do to help under-represented groups access and enjoy nature.

A healthier Scotland

While 82% of the total population had visited the outdoors for recreation over the 12 month period, this dropped to just 47% of those who reported having poor health, 73% of older people and those in the most deprived parts of Scotland and 63% of those with a long-term illness or disability.

SNH Chair Mike Cantlay said: "We know the many benefits of getting outside for physical and mental health and wellbeing, so it's great to see that people in Scotland are enjoying the outdoors more than ever before. We want everyone across Scotland to benefit from nature but it's clear from these findings that some groups still face barriers. That's why SNH is investing in projects across Scotland to improve green spaces in our towns and cities, particularly in the most disadvantaged areas, to create better places for people to connect with nature closer to home and reduce these inequalities. The outdoors is our Natural Health Service, and we are also working closely with other organisations to realise the incredible potential of our natural environment for a healthier Scotland."

Tartan of the Month Scotland's War

The Scottish Banner is pleased to be offering the Tartan of the Month series highlighting a variety of different, unique and colourful tartans from around the world which are registered with the Scottish Register of Tartans in Edinburgh. The Scottish Register of Tartans was established by an act of the Scottish Parliament in November 2008 and promotes and preserves information about historic and contemporary tartans from Scotland and throughout the world. Text and image use is courtesy of the Scottish Register of Tartans (SRT).

The 2,000+ pages on the Scotland's War (1914-1919) Charity's website at www. scotlandswar.co.uk reflect the significant sacrifices made by the Scottish people on the Home and Fighting Fronts, and the Scottish Diaspora, in the Great War.

This is the Scotland's War (1914-1919) Charity's commemorative tartan (SRT reference 12185). The dominant red colour represents the sacrifices that were made in the War. It is not generally understood that the War was not technically and legally over until the signing of the Treaty of Versailles in June 1919. Until then, there was an armistice which is a formal agreement of warring parties to stop fighting. The Scotland's War (1914-1919) Project will continue until the centenary of the Treaty of Versailles in June 1919, which ended the War. Scotland's War (1914-1919) was formally accepted for registration as a charity by the Scottish Charity Regulator on 17 November 2016 and the website hosts the contributions from 21 local authority partners in Scotland, and from individual contributors at home and abroad in the Scottish Diaspora

This followed the decision by the University of Edinburgh not to fund the original Heritage Lottery Funded project. The work and legacy projects of the Charity is approached in a sensitive, respectful and ethical manner, and ensures that the Scotland's War (1914-1919) commemorative initiatives are relevant to all ethnic, religious and secular parts of Scottish society.

A woven sample of this tartan has been received by the Scottish Register of Tartans for permanent preservation in the National Records of Scotland.

St Kilda's special reefs and sea caves are in good condition he findings of a wide-reaching survey carried out in 2015 by a team of divers have now been published by Scottish Natural Heritage (SNH).

Almost 90 years after St Kilda's last 36 residents were evacuated to the mainland, the islands remain vitally important for the wildlife they support.

The World Heritage Site hosts huge seabird populations, including the world's second largest colony of North Atlantic gannets, and the waters around St Kilda are part of Scotland's Marine Protected Areas (MPA) network, designated a Special Area of Conservation (SAC) for their reefs and sea caves, which attract a wealth of spectacular sea life.

Crucial to the management of the MPA network, as with protected areas on land, is monitoring.

Weather conditions severely interrupted the team's plans but they managed to survey four caves at St Kilda, returning with valuable data which found that the cave and reef features were in good condition.

The purpose of the St Kilda survey was to judge the current condition of the site and to establish a baseline against which future assessments of its special features could be made.

A Royal Child from the Stewarts of Crookston

Ah! Mary, tho the wind should rave Wi jealous spite to keep me frae thee, The darkest Stormy night I'd brave, For ae sweet secret moment wi thee Cruikston Castle's Lonely Wa's by Robert Tannahill, 1809.

ady Lennox, Margaret Douglas, Henry Darnley's mother, was not only her mother-in law but a kinswoman of Mary Queen of Scots in her own right. She was the daughter of Margaret Tudor, Henry the VII's daughter and Mary's grandmother. This marriage of James IV to Margaret Tudor in 1503, known as the marriage of the Thistle and the Rose, was a fateful one. Although furthest from the minds of the treaty makers at the time, the wedding eventually led to the joining of the crowns exactly a century later when the great grandson of the union, James VI, became King James I of England as well.

But Margaret Tudor was married twice, her first husband had been James IV of Scotland, Queen Mary's grandfather but after being widowed Margaret Tudor took a second husband, Archibald Douglas, the father of Lady Lennox. Lady Lennox and her son Henry Darnley thus had a claim to royal blood and the throne of Scotland, but not near as strong as Mary's. Mary and Henry were both great grandchildren of Henry the VII of England giving them both Tudor as well as Stewart blood in their veins.

The crown of Scotland

Lady Lennox and her husband Matthew, Lord Darnley, the 4th Earl of Lennox, had long harboured high hopes that their son Henry Stewart might someday wear the crown of Scotland, but Matthew the owner of Crookston Castle, was an out and out rogue. He was an ambitious and thoroughly ruthless man and a strong supporter of Henry VIII's 'rough wooing', in which Henry Tudor attempted by open warfare to arrange a marriage between the infant Queen Mary and his son Edward Tudor. This would have united the two kingdoms at a much earlier date, than in fact came to pass. Matthew played his part by sacking and pillaging the Clyde and Ayrshire coasts as a contribution to the 'rough wooing'. That led to the infant Mary's flight to France for her protection and to her subsequent marriage the Dauphin.

Because he had entered into such an unpatriotic agreement with the English King, Lennox was declared guilty of treason by the Scots Parliament in 1545. His estates, including Crookston, were forfeited and he very wisely fled to England. The result was that Henry Stewart, his infant son, was largely raised in England and he and his mother, Lady Lennox, were in due course detained there for years because of Queen Elizabeth's fear that they might become rival claimants to her throne. It was not until 1565 that the young Henry Stewart was permitted by Elizabeth to return to Scotland. He was not quite twenty-two, whilst Mary was twenty-three.

Mary was now at the mercy of her cousin, Elizabeth, from whom she urgently, but naïvely, sought refuge.

Perhaps it was because she was lonely that the young widow of the Dauphin took to Darnley as soon as she saw him.

The young Queen was undoubtedly attracted to him with her sense of romance, love and beauty. He was very tall, a good attribute in the eyes of a woman who was herself 6 feet tall. He was fair, strong and athletic looking, and according to one observer of the time 'beardless and baby-faced.' Mary and Henry now spent a lot of time together and it's not too hard to accept that they might have spent some of that time at Crookston during this early romantic interlude.

Heir to the crowns of two nations As far as everyone was concerned Henry Stewart was a sensible choice as a husband. His mother was the childless Queen Elizabeth's cousin and so a match would combine two possible heirs to England's crown. No one could refuse to admit the claims of a child born to such a couple and as far as the stumbling block of religion was concerned, Darnley suited both sides, for his mother Lady Lennox was a Catholic whilst Darnley, himself, had later embraced the Protestant faith. Everyone's ambitions were finally realized when the pair married on 29 July 1565 and later their child, James, became the heir to the crowns of two nations. The Stewarts of Crookston had finally produced a future king, destined not only to rule Scotland as James VI but to rule England as well as James I.

When the Battle of Langside took place, Mary had just made a daring escape from her imprisonment at Loch Leven Castle and had rallied her forces to take on the Regent Murray. Most historians support the view, that Mary witnessed the resulting battle from Court Knowe, at Cathcart Castle, or from another small hill above the battlefield. After her consort, Henry Stewart, Lord Darnley, was murdered at Kirk o' Fields his father, Mathew, turned against the Queen and took up arms against her.

Forces against Mary

He joined the Regent's forces against Mary on the battlefield at Langside, just a few miles ride from his castle at Crookston. On the other hand, Sir John Maxwell, Laird of Nether Pollok and one of Mary's adherents was sent a letter calling him to her banner. He was created a baronet in the course of that eventful day, possibly the recipient of the last exercise of her power as Queen of Scotland.

At this point, so the story goes, that having been advised by her lords, at a council of war, that a flight to Dumbarton was impossible, the impetuous Mary is said to have pulled an ebony crucifix from her breast and placed it in the palm of her hand and passionately declared angrily to her supporters, "by the cross in my loof, I will this day fight the Regent and I will be there tonight in spite of you traitors".

From that time on that spot has been known as Crossmyloof. It had always seemed an unusual name for a familiar place to us children living in Pollok, but the story of how it got its strange name was unknown to most of us then. Crossmyloof was simply where we went to on the bus, along Pollokshaws Road, to get to the Crossmyloof ice—skating rink, near to Queen's Park, named after Mary. Six thousand men had mustered under Mary's loyal Lords but unfortunately for her cause, these allies had not the military talent to match their loyalty.

Nothing was left but for Mary to flee

The Regent, her half-brother, Murray, intercepted her forces at Langside, as the latter were marching to Dumbarton.

The Queen's men were out-generalled and out-fought in less than half an hour. Three hundred of her army fell in battle and another four hundred were taken prisoner. Nothing was left but for Mary to flee. She was by this time standing less than half a mile from Murray's victorious troops, and there was no way she could get past them to Dumbarton.

Instead, the faithful and courageous Mary Seaton dressed herself as the Queen to lead astray her pursuers. Mary was escorted by the Lord Herries, Fleming, Livingstone and the young Douglas's and rode nearly a hundred miles, non-stop; to reach the coast of the Solway, near Dundrennan Abbey, at a place now called Port Mary. She embarked on a fishing smack that took her to Workington on the Cumberland coast. Mary was now at the mercy of her cousin, Elizabeth, from whom she urgently, but naïvely, sought refuge.

Instead, she was imprisoned at Fotheringhay Castle for 19 years, before her execution.

Tis past – she rests – the scaffold hath been swept, the headsman's guilty axe to rust consigned.

The Gemrock Museum in Galloway.

reetings from Scotland where the winter weather is about to hit hard. Indeed, by the time you read this we may be in the grip of an Arctic blast. The bulbs that are peeping out of the ground are in for a shock...

And talking of things that grow. We lost five large trees when Storm Ali hit last autumn - and now another ancient Douglas Fir has bitten the dust. The towering tree was bending ominously by the drive and this month a tree surgeon arrived to examine the thing.

It looked like it was well past its sell-by date. And it was. Our expert confirmed our worst fears and urged its removal. But as he made the first cut with a giant saw, the thing seemed to have a mind of its own. It twisted and fell in the wrong direction. Right on top of the nearby rhododendron bushes.

Rhododendron Ponticum

Mercifully no-one was hurt. And thankfully the unfortunate plants it crashed down on were not the specimen kind. No, these were the common-orgarden 'ponticum'. Purple and as a picture for a couple of weeks of the year. But generally considered an all-round invader.

Lady MacGregor's Scotland By: Lady Fiona

Lady MacGregor of MacGregor – otherwise known as British broadcaster Fiona Armstrong. Fiona is currently news reading for the BBC, but she also leaves the studio to report on all matters Scottish. Fiona lives in Scotland with her husband, Chief of Clan MacGregor, Sir Malcolm MacGregor of MacGregor, and is also an active member of Clan Armstrong, so their lives are interwoven with all things tartan. The couple have moved from the borderlands to the lowlands, home is now a white tower house between Perth and Dundee, although filming and writing takes Fiona all over Scotland.

I may have told you before: 'Rhododendron Ponticum' was brought across to Scotland in the mid-1700s as an ornamental plant. It probably came from Spain, or Portugal and it ended up in gardens, parks and estates, especially in Scotland where the soil was very much to its liking. Now it is classed as one of the country's most threatening non-native invasive plants. Vast swathes of Scottish land are covered by these bushes.

In short, our decimated shrubbery is not a great loss to mankind. Anyhow, our tree expert apologises. He clears away the worst of the broken branches and leaves. But substantial debris remains. Over the lawns is a mass of broken twigs and greenery. So, the chief and I don our outdoor gear and get stuck in. We beaver away. Backs bent, arms filled with foliage.

The Gemrock Museum

It is a far cry from the leisurely film shoot later in the week. The Gemrock Museum in Galloway is one of Scotland's most iconic exhibition centres.

Here are rocks, crystals, fossils - and gems. It is literally a treasure trove. Here are some four thousand artefacts, some real, but one definitely not. It is a replica of what was once the biggest nugget of gold ever found. The 'Welcome Stranger' was found in Victoria, Australia, in 1869.

It weighed around 173 pounds and was worth a fortune, although I understand that this record has recently been beaten again by a find in Australia.

Most the artefacts at the Gemrock Museum, though, are real and I like the colourful crystals - and the stories behind them. They say that amethyst was traditionally worn by holy men to promote piety. Indeed, this purple sparkler was rumoured to ward off drunkenness. Agate, meanwhile, was used to cleanse the mind and was rumoured to bring good luck and fortune. Rose quartz gave inner peace to anyone who touched it whilst fluorite was used to ease rheumatism.

Creetown

The Gemrock museum is sited in the village of Creetown which is an appropriate place. Creetown was once famed for its stone. From here, local granite blasted from the nearby hills was shipped all over the world. Various UK docks, including Greenock and Leith harbours, were built with these hardy white blocks.

It was said you never saw an overweight Scottish quarryman and in Victorian times hundreds of men toiled in the local quarry. They arrived with their picks and shovels and were rapidly followed by their families. The industry swelled the population of this south-west coastal village to three thousand.

Today the quarry is no longer worked, and the village is home to six hundred. It could be a forgotten place. Yet Creetown is a real example of how a community can regenerate itself with local businesses, a thriving arts and crafts centre - and a much-visited museum.

Dundee

Another place that is on the up is the port of Dundee. Here in Scotland's fourth largest city the waterfront is being renovated and redesigned. And in pride of place is the new museum of decorative arts and design - the Victoria & Albert. A sister of the main V&A in London (named after Queen Victoria and Prince Albert) this stunning modernistic building has been ten years in the planning and has cost eight million pounds.

Inside are the Scottish design galleries with thousands of Scottish objects on display, including the famous Oak Room created by the Glasgow architect, Charles Rennie Mackintosh. From tartan to swimsuits, to engineering designs. From a designer suit worn by Marlene Dietrich as she arrived in America on board a cruise-ship in 1950. It makes Dundee a must-see destination. And the chief and I plan to get up there soon to have a good look round. We will report back!

Hopes to increase film production for Scotland

SL Land, the company behind a £250m plan to build Scotland's first film studio complex in 2017, now hopes to go ahead on a site at Saltersgate, near Dalkeith, in the southeast of Edinburgh.

A planning application has been filed with Midlothian Council for a mixeduse development comprising film and TV studios including workshops, offices, backlot, trailer park and film academy, along with associated infrastructure.

The company's first choice for the International TV & Film Production Facility of Scotland, also known as Pentland Studios, was Straiton, on the southern outskirts of the Scottish capital. However, this had to be abandoned after a local farmer, who faced eviction, successfully objected to the development in the Scottish Land Court.

The new plan arose after Scottish developer Buccleuch Estates approached PSL Land to suggest the Saltersgate site, which is about four miles from Straiton and close to Dalkeith Country Park.

Nick Waugh, commercial property director at the commercial arm of Buccleuch Estates, said: "We recognise the importance of this ambitious project, and are delighted to play a role in helping deliver a world-class film studio to Scotland that will inevitably transform the Scottish creative industry and our reputation as a filming location across the globe."

The development will include six sound stages, two backlots, a 180-room hotel, and 50,000 square feet of workshop space. The teaching building mentioned the application will be the result of a collaboration with Edinburgh Napier University aimed at establishing a Scottish Film Academy.

The industry has longed for suitable studio space in Scotland as major film and television products may have used Scotland in film the production has often happened in other parts of the UK.

Brooch gifted by Mary, Queen of Scots to her close aide and personal hairdresser goes on display in Edinburgh brooch given by Mary, Queen of Scots to one of her closest lady attendants, who had a particular flair for hairdressing, has gone on display at the Palace of Holyroodhouse for the first time. Mary Seton was a devoted assistant and friend of Mary, Queen of Scots and lived with her at the Palace from 1561–6. She was one of the four attendants known as the 'Four Marys' who spent many years in France with the exiled Queen.

Mary Seton continued to accompany Mary, Queen of Scots during her captivity in England. Sir Francis Knollys, an English courtier charged with the care of the Queen, noted that Mary Seton 'did set such a curled hair upon the Queen..... every other day she hath a new device of head dressing, without any cost, and yet setteth forth a woman gaily well'.

The brooch dates from c.1580 and is made from enamelled gold and studded with pearls and rubies. It can be seen in the

Famous inhabitants

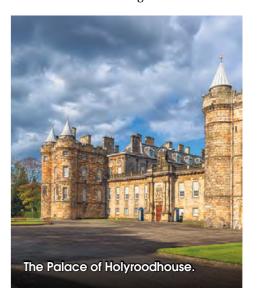

Mary, Queen of Scots lived at the Palace following her return from exile in France in 1561. In 1565 she married Henry Stuart, Lord Darnley, in the Palace chapel; just a year later her Italian secretary, David Rizzio, was murdered by Darnley in front of the Queen, in her private apartments.

A brooch given by Mary, Queen of Scots to one of her closest lady attendants, who had a particular flair for hairdressing, has gone on display at the Palace of Holyroodhouse for the first time.

The private apartments of Mary, Queen of Scots have recently been re-presented as part of a £10 million investment by Royal Collection Trust to enhance the visitor experience at the Palace, including the re-display of the historic spaces to tell the stories of the Palace's famous inhabitants. A royal residence for more than 500 years, the Palace of Holyroodhouse has served as home to both Mary, Queen of Scots and Bonnie Prince Charlie.

Other projects that form part of the investment, collectively called Future Programme, include the creation of a public physic garden and a Learning Centre within the restored Abbey Strand buildings, and new ticketing and welcome spaces.

Sally Goodsir, Assistant Curator of Decorative Arts, Royal Collection Trust, said, "Through new displays of the Royal Collection our visitors will be able to explore the Palace's close association with some of Scotland's best-known historic figures. We want everyone to gain a deeper understanding of Edinburgh's royal palace and of its continuing role as the official residence of the Sovereign in Scotland."

Caithness Broch Project

aithness Broch Project is looking to build an Iron Age roundhouse in Caithness. The reconstruction will use ancient methods that built similar mysterious structures in area, something that hasn't been done in 2,000 years. Brochs are uniquely Scottish towers, built during the Iron Age (around 2,000 years ago) and mainly around the Highlands and Islands of the country. Caithness, however, can lay claim to having more brochs than anywhere else in Scotland - it is the 'home of the broch'. These towers are incredible and awe-inspiring buildings - some would have reached up to 40 feet (13m) high. Double walled, sloping in profile and with features such as corbelled cells, staircases, wall voids, hearths, stone 'furniture' and mysterious ritual wells, these structures were real feats of architecture and engineering.

The first broch in Scotland in over 2,000 years

Kenneth McElroy, director with Caithness Broch Project, said: "The project design brief document will help to inform and refine a number of points concerning the project - from architectural design to sustainability. It is a vital component in the development of our plan to build the first broch in Scotland in over 2,000 years. Bone combs, painted pebbles, polished discs which might have been used as mirrors and a skull fragment with three holes drilled through have been found in Caithness brochs.

"All these things point towards the idea brochs were used for domestic purposes. But to make the Caithness broch memorable to tourists we need to make it large. There are [replica] roundhouses popping up all over England and Scotland, so to give people a reason to visit Caithness we want to make this one impressive and iconic. Caithness had more brochs than anywhere else in Scotland. We don't know why, and this is something we would like to find out. Caithness has not been subject to a lot of archaeological investigation compared to places such as Orkney. Rebuilding a broch, using the same techniques as the original builders, the team hope it will provide an insight into how Iron Age people lived their lives in Caithness."

Between 200 and 300 broch's are thought to exist in Caithness, the highest number found in any Scottish region.

Nested on the banks of stunning Loch Awe, the Grade A listed Saint Conan's Kirk has been named as one of Scotland's top 10 buildings. It is steeped in family history, unconventional approaches to design and magical stories. The kirk was built by the amateur architect Walter Campbell of the wealthy Blythswood family, so his mother had a grand church close by. Now a £100,000 grant is helping this unique building secure its future as one of the area's leading attractions as Judy Vickers explains.

he view has been described as one of the most beautiful in the Highlands. Looking out from the sundial terrace of the church, Loch Awe stretches away in front, surrounded by magnificent mountains, while the woodland-enclosed site of an ancient monastery lies behind a scattering of islands to the right, one of which, Innischonain, was once the home of the Campbell family.

A soaring church named after a historic saint, an old family name in a tucked-away part of the Highlands – it all has a centuries-old feel. Yet one of the most surprising things about St Conan's Kirk, amongst a host of unexpected treasures, is that this architectural gem was only completed in 1930.

Built by an eccentric wealthy amateur architect, St Conan's is now becoming a popular visitor attraction. The Grade-A listed building was voted one of the top 10 Scottish buildings of the last 100 years in a 2016 RIAS public poll and, with work about to begin revitalising and repairing the property, thanks to a £100,000 National Lottery and Historic Environment Scotland grant, the church looks like having as bright a future as it has a curious past.

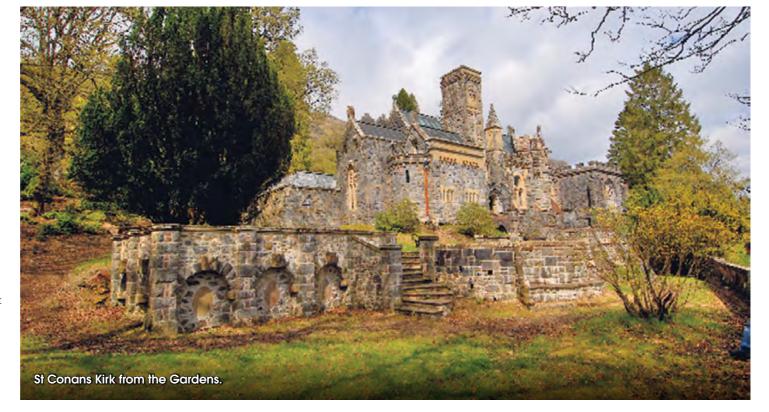

The Blythswood family
The story begins in the 1870s with the coming of the Callander and Oban Railway. Prior to that, despite the presence of the Stirling-Oban road, the north shore of the loch was a lonely and empty place. This increased accessibility prompted Walter Douglas Campbell, a younger son of the Blythswood family, to buy the island of Innischonain from the Marquis of Breadalbane and build a mansion house on it for himself, his sister, Helen, and his mother.

Peter Hennessy, chair of the Friends of St Conan's, explains: "The Blythswood family had enormous holdings of land in Glasgow, and interests in mining, coal, iron, and shipbuilding in Renfew so they were pretty wealthy. He was the 4th son of Lord Blythswood, he came up to Loch Awe as part of the Victorian drive towards the Highlands started by Victoria herself."

As well as his talents as an architect, surveyor and engineer, Walter was also a gifted playwright and he performed at Balmoral for the Queen as well as becoming friendly with her son Prince Leopold.

"He built the house for his mother and sister - the folk story is that his mother wanted to go to church but not have to travel through the Pass of Brander, so he said he would build her a church," says Mr Hennessy.

And when he said he would build her a church, he meant it rather more literally than most wealthy landowners of the time - he designed and oversaw the building of the church himself. It was begun in 1881, with the first phase completed in 1886, very much in the tradition of Scottish Presbyterian churches. But just over ten years later, he began a second phase where he let his imagination run wild.

"He applied for a number of church commissions but didn't get them so thought: 'Damn it, I can to do it myself'. He was wealthy enough that he could indulge himself," says Mr Hennessy.

A soaring church named after a historic saint, an old family name in a tucked-away part of the Highlands – it all has a centuries-old feel. Yet one of the most surprising things about St Conan's Kirk, amongst a host of unexpected treasures, is that this architectural gem was only completed in 1930.

It is said that he tried to include examples of every type of ecclesiastical architecture found in Scotland, and that is why there is a circle of standing stones at the entrance gate. It is built mainly in Norman or Romanesque style although incorporating both early and later examples of that style – although the larger square tower is Saxon with stones decorated with a fern-like pattern.

Robert the Bruce

The stones for the church were rolled down the hillside from Ben Cruachan and large boulders form the piers for the chancel arch. The timbers for the mini-cloister – a gem in itself - came from the wrecks of two famous battleships, the Caledonia and the Duke of Wellington.

"Walter was closely connected with the Duke of Argyll and Iona and he also went to Mull and sketched Pictish and Celtic gravestones, and those influences can be seen in the details in the church," says Mr Hennessy.

Pieces of carving from Iona Abbey are built into the north wall of the south aisle, and the church's close connection with that historic island mean visitors often make a point of stopping at St Conan's on their way there.

Other curious yet beautiful highlights include stalls carved from Spanish chestnut representing the ten clans which once dominated the area, and a large organ screen carved by the multi-talented Walter himself with grotesque monsters and heavenly creatures.

The church is unusual for a Church of Scotland building - although it was never adopted by the Kirk and remains a chapel of ease - in that it has a number of chapels, including St Conval's Chapel, below which, in a vault, lie the remains of Walter and his sister Helen, St Bride's Chapel with its Levantine marble slabs, and, most famously, the Bruce Chapel, named after Robert the Bruce, one of Scotland's bestloved kings. It was a manoeuvre on the hillside above the kirk that helped Bruce win one of his most decisive victories at the Pass of Brander; the chapel also contains one of the king's bones, a 19th-century bell from the Skerryvore Lighthouse, a clear glass window, originally from St Mary's Kirk in South Leith from 1483, and a largerthan-life effigy of the king himself.

Lochside kirk

Other details include a painted-glass window with figures of angels and cherubs which Helen Campbell designed and made, a Celtic Cross erected in memory of Walter's mother, a font in the model of a Breton fishing boat, gargoyles on the roof in the shape of a dog chasing hares, and metal rabbit head spouts for the drainage system. The kirk was named for St Conan, a local bishop who was said to have rapped the knuckles of the Devil.

Walter died in 1914 and the work on the chapel was continued by his sister until her death in 1927, when it passed into the ownership of trustees who completed the work in 1930.

Just one church service a month is held there now but a few years ago the Friends of St Conan's was formed with the aim of giving the kirk a broader and brighter future.

"We didn't want it just as a church with a small congregation; it needed a wider audience," explains Mr Hennessy. Work will begin this spring, using the £100,000 grant, to make essential repairs to the building, particularly the roof, as the first stage of a plan to create a visitor area and make St Conan's more of a community and tourist hub. Already, says Mr Hennessy, the church is becoming more popular with a string of community events, including meetings, exhibitions and musical concerts, as well as more wedding bookings and an increase in the numbers of tourists, all of whom are left astounded by the curious lochside kirk.

"People are always quite taken aback when they come," says Mr Hennessy. "It's just not something you expect to see in village of 220-odd people."

ary Queen of Scots, starring Saoirse Ronan and Margot
Robbie has had its Scottish premiere in Edinburgh following a special reception for the film's makers and stars at Edinburgh
Castle hosted by the First Minister Nicola Sturgeon. Directed by Josie Rourke, the film also stars a host of Scottish actors including Jack Lowden, David Tennant, Martin Compston and James McArdle.

Theatrical visionary Josie Rourke has made her film directorial debut with a powerful dramatisation of the incredible life of Mary Queen of Scots. Based on the ground-breaking book Queen of Scots: The True Life of Mary Stuart by Dr. John Guy, which uncovered new evidence about Mary and Elizabeth, the film retells the story of these two Queens in a way that speaks to the experience of women in the modern world.

Immortalised by history

Born a Catholic at a time of religious turmoil, as an infant Mary is sent for her safety to Catholic France. At 15, Mary marries the heir to the French throne. Queen of France at 16, at 18 Mary is widowed, defies pressure to remarry and instead returns to her native Scotland to reclaim her rightful throne. In Mary's absence, Protestants have gained control of Scotland, and her halfbrother, Moray, has ruled in Mary's place. The powerful John Knox leads Scotland's Protestants and believes that a woman monarch is against nature and God's will. In England, Mary's cousin Queen Elizabeth faces pressure to marry and produce an heir. In Scotland, Mary faces conspiracy, civil rebellion and a hatred of women that brings her sexual conduct into constant question.

Mary has, by birth, a rival claim to Elizabeth's throne. The two Queens have a unique fascination with each other: only they can understand what it is like to rule in their land as women. Mary offers friendship and a treaty that settles their competing claims, but the bloody and intense politics of their courts keeps them apart.

Mary defies her advisors and England's will to marry and produce an heir to both kingdoms, her son James I. Following his birth, there is again the possibility of alliance and peace, but Mary's enemies are too numerous, and Elizabeth witnesses, with mounting horror, the cruelty, conspiracy and violence of Mary's court.

Both women make very different choices about marriage, children and leadership. Through those choices, each woman has been immortalised by history.

Filmed across Scotland

The film was shot across locations in Scotland in 2017, including Strathdon, Glencoe, Glen Feshie, Blackness Castle and Seacliff, East Lothian.

Nicola Sturgeon, First Minister of Scotland said, "The Scottish premiere of Mary Queen of Scots provides another opportunity to showcase Scotland as a world-class location for productions. Securing film and TV productions offers significant benefits to the Scottish economy and job opportunities for our skilled crew. It's good for tourism too as our stunning scenery features on screen. Through Screen Scotland, we are increasing support for the sector and seizing emerging opportunities to ensure the industry in Scotland continues to go from strength to strength."

Irish actress Saoirse Ronan has been committed to play Mary Stuart for years, originally signing on to a much earlier iteration of a biopic of the ill-fated queen when she was just 18 years old. "Even then, I always felt a real connection to Scotland and the history, probably because I think there are so many similarities between Scottish and Irish history," says Ronan, now 24.

"The idea of playing a queen who represents so much for the Scottish people and had such a story to tell was really exciting. I believed it was a story that needed to be told. As an actor, it was a brilliant role to get, and I knew how lucky I was to have been entrusted with it. That wasn't something I was going to abandon. I always had faith it would come together at the right time."

The turbulent life of the charismatic Mary

Mary Queen of Scots explores the turbulent life of the charismatic Mary Stuart. Queen of France at 16 and widowed at 18, Mary defies pressure to remarry. Instead, she returns to her native Scotland to reclaim her rightful throne. But Scotland and England fall under the rule of the compelling Elizabeth I. Each young Queen beholds her "sister" in fear and fascination. Rivals in power and in love, and female regents in a masculine world, the two must decide how to play the game of marriage versus independence. Determined to rule as much more than a figurehead, Mary asserts her claim to the English throne, threatening Elizabeth's sovereignty. Betrayal, rebellion, and conspiracies within each court imperil both thrones - and change the course of history.

Production spend in Scotland has reached records levels of £95million. An increase of over 300% in the past decade, the figures reflect the growing strength and confidence of Scotland's film and tv sector as increased incentives like Scotland's Production Growth Fund, new funds from Scottish Government coupled with existing UK tax incentives, are bringing unprecedented international interest in Scotland as a place to film.

Jenni Steele, Film and Creative Industries Manager at VisitScotland, said, "Scotland's history and culture is a huge driver for visitors from across the globe, with the life of Mary Queen of Scots a fascinating part of that. We're excited to see Saoirse Ronan and Margot Robbie take on the iconic roles of Mary and Elizabeth in this latest big-screen interpretation of Mary Stuart's life, especially as Scotland's landscapes and built heritage appear on screen. With its mix of political intrigue and stunning imagery of Scotland, Mary Queen of Scots could offer further inspiration for visitors to explore the country and the many real historical locations linked to the 16th century monarch."

The film's Scottish Premiere followed Margot Robbie's BAFTA nomination for the Best Supporting Actress in her role as Elizabeth I, alongside Alexandra Byrne for Best Costume Design and Jenny Shircore for Best Make Up/Hair.

Did you know?

- Mary Queen of Scots was born on December 8, 1542. She was just six days old when her father, King James V, died, and she ascended to the Scottish throne. She spent most of her childhood in France, her mother's native country, while Scotland was ruled by regents. In 1558, she married the French Dauphin who became King Francis II of France in 1559. But Mary was only Queen Consort for a year before Francis died. She travelled back to Scotland to take up her throne in 1561.
- Elizabeth I, born 7 September 1533, was the daughter of Henry VIII and Anne Boleyn (who was executed when Elizabeth was two years old). Henry was succeeded on the English throne by Elizabeth's half-brother Edward VI, then her cousin Lady Jane Grey (for nine days) followed by her half-sister, the Catholic Mary (who was Henry's first child with Catherine of Aragon). Elizabeth became Queen in 1558.

IN SCOTLAND TODAY

2018 record year for Nessie sightings

Figures have been released by the Loch Ness Monster Sightings Register that 2018 was a record year for "Nessie" spotting. Statistics showed the world famous monster was spotted by 13 people in 2018, up from 11 in 2017. Sightings occurred throughout the year by people from the United States, Canada, England, Ireland, Australia and Scotland. The most recorded recent sightings took place in 1996 with 17, with previous record years of over 20 sightings taking place in the 1930's and 1960's.

The first recorded sighting of the Loch Ness Monster was in 565 AD. Nessie was said to have appeared from the deep Loch Ness waters. Here she snatched up and ate the servant, St Columba, before being forced back into the waters by his very self. Over the years, more rumours spread far and wide of other such 'strange events' at Loch Ness. Many believed in the water Kelpies and the Each-Uisge, (meaning 'water horse') a water spirit in Scottish folklore. These ancient Scottish myths about such water creatures contributed to the notion of a creature living in the depths of Loch Ness. There have been a total of 1106 sightings of the mythical monster since it was first spotted by St Columba over 1000 years ago.

The St Magnus Graffiti Project

Volunteers have been invited by the Orkney Archaeology Society (OAS) to help record nearly 900 years of graffiti that has been recorded at the historic St Magnus Cathedral in Kirkwall. Workshops for volunteers have now begun to allow volunteers to be trained in the skill of building recording in this exciting new project to record 870 years of mark-making in the Cathedral. These sessions are being run by professional archaeologists, who will also be advising the project throughout. Once trained volunteers will be working in the cathedral and recording/photographing and writing up all marks, Graffiti and other carvings that have been made in the building over the hundreds of years. Full access to the building, including behind the scenes and to places where the public are usually not allowed.

Martin Carruthers, Chairman of OAS said; "This is a really exciting project and something a bit different for the society. St Magnus Cathedral is such a well-loved building in Orkney, it's a fabulous opportunity to learn more about the people who have made their mark their over the centuries. As well as the recording work in the Cathedral we will also be training a group of volunteers in the skills to record buildings and it would be great if these skills went on to be used in other historical buildings across Orkney."

Having a Ball with Cinderella

In January the Scottish Ballet made the first of five wishes come true as part of their 50th anniversary celebrations in 2019. Lily Douglas, aged 11, was surprised by Scottish Ballet Principal dancers who revealed that her dream of dancing with the company, taking a backstage tour, and watching Cinderella would come true. An avid dancer and a huge ballet fan, Lily has been battling a form of childhood cancer called 'Ewing's Sarcoma' and has recently been undergoing rounds of treatment. A family friend submitted a wish on Lily's behalf to our Make a Wish campaign for her to spend the day with the company.

Thinking she was attending a workshop at Theatre Royal Glasgow, Principal dancers Bethany Kingsley-Garner, Constance Devernay and Sophie Martin surprised her and announced that she would, in fact, be welcomed to watch the company take their morning class, before joining them on stage. Dame Darcey Bussell greeted Lily with a special video message before she was taken on an exclusive backstage tour to the dancers' dressing rooms and to see the sets, costumes, and props.

On stage, Principal dancer Christopher Harrison, dressed as The Prince, presented Lily with her own custom, bejewelled pointe shoe, before she and her family and friends took to their seats to watch the magical performance of Christopher Hampson's Cinderella.

Jane Douglas, Lily's mother said: "I can't believe Lily's wish was chosen. When I found out I was over the moon; it was so difficult to keep the news a secret, but the surprise was worth it. From the minute we arrived, we were made to feel so welcome by Scottish Ballet and it was an incredible experience. Lily had an amazing day, and she loved being part of the company."

Book comes back to Aberdeen library after 40 years

It doesn't quite beat the record of 64 years but someone has returned a book to the Aberdeen Central Library which was 40 years overdue. Crime novel A Touch of Danger by James Jones was last taken out in 1978, the book is about an American detective who runs into danger while operating in a Greek island. The library said; "Perhaps it was a New Year's Resolution to return any library books to clear those shelves. If you have any overdue items, whether it is 40 days or 40 years, you can return them to any library in the city. Don't worry, we are very nice and understanding, plus fines are capped at a maximum of £3.60 per book!"

The book's reappearance follows the return of another title in July which was 64 years overdue. J M Barrie's A Window In Thrums made its way back to the Aberdeen Central Library from a charity shop in London, and now rests in a glass display case for posterity.

Edinburgh Council opens citywide TVL consultation

The City of Edinburgh Council has opened a citywide consultation on proposals for a Transient Visitor Levy (TVL) or 'Tourist Tax'. Having conducted detailed research, informal engagement with industry stakeholders and an indepth survey of residents and visitors, the Council last month set out key aspects of how a scheme could look.

Now, views are being sought from all city stakeholders but, in particular, the hospitality and tourism sector, plus city businesses and investors, culture partners, visitors and residents, concerning the best possible arrangements for introducing a TVL in Edinburgh.

The draft proposal suggested a charge of either 2% or £2 per room per night, chargeable all year round on all forms of accommodation, including short-term lets, but capped at seven nights. Respondents are being asked for their views on the details of the scheme but also importantly what any income raised should be spent on.

The Council sees the purpose of this fund as being to invest in and manage the consequences of the future success of tourism within the city and respondents will also be asked to identify things they feel could benefit from the estimated to be at least £11m per annum that would be raised.

Figures show 85% of respondents to a City of Edinburgh Council survey backed the move, including more than half of accommodation providers.

The results suggested 90% of residents are supportive of a tourist tax, while 51% of Edinburgh accommodation providers, who would have to enforce the proposal, also support it.

HM Convict Prison Peterhead From housing criminals to a museum

By: Kenny MacAskill

Kenny MacAskill was an SNP MSP and Justice Secretary from 2007-2014. He is now a columnist with the Herald and Scotsman, as well as contributing to other papers and magazines. He has written several books on the Scottish Diaspora along with former First Minister Henry McLeish, as well on his own on Scottish politics, the Lockerbie Bombing and a biography of the trade union leader Jimmy Reid, recently released.

rom Alcatraz to the Tower of London there are infamous prisons which now form visitor attractions. Scotland's likewise but it's not in any of the major castles with historic goals or even in one of the major cities with gruesome dungeons to frighten young and old. Instead it's located in the north east of Scotland and in an area more famous for farming and fishing but which over the years has seen Peterhead become synonymous with Scotland's most forbidding penal institution.

Of course, many of the ancient castles still possess their medieval goals and the cities have their modern grisly venues. Other sites have played historic roles in imprisonment with Fort George near Inverness housing the United Irishmen who were neither executed nor transported after the 1798 rebellion. But it's still better known for its construction to suppress the Highlands and repel invaders after defeat at Culloden ended the 1745 Jacobite rebellion.

Scotland's most hardened criminals

For throughout my lifetime and for generations before Peterhead was the place that sent a chill up the spine of many and instilled foreboding amongst some of Scotland's most hardened criminals. It was there that sentences were served by Scotland's most notorious prisoners and were overseen by some of the most experienced Governors.

As Justice Secretary I visited it and was responsible for its closure in 2013 with its replacement by a new institution adjacent to the former site. Neither the new prison nor indeed any other are particularly welcoming places but the old HMP Peterhead was especially cold and unforgiving. Even as an escorted visitor it sent a shudder through me.

All though that now remains is an old naval bell and part of the old site which now houses a museum to tell its story.

Its notoriety is perhaps understandable as it was Scotland's first convict prison when built in the second half of the eighteenth century and throughout its lifetime it was used for holding the most serious offenders before latterly specialising in dealing with sex offenders.

Its inmates have included Oscar Slater, the victim of a great miscarriage of justice before the first world war, John McLean the revolutionary and anti-war activist and Johnny Remensky, the safe breaker freed to assist the second world war effort. 1988 even saw a riot in which prison officers were held hostage and military special forces were required to be used to secure their release. Walking around the prison I saw graffiti and the names of many who had been notorious prisoners when I was younger and then a practising defence lawyer.

A distinct Scottish institution

Now though what remains tells not just of some individuals but of Scotland's penal policy over the years. Historically prisons were local and sentences were short, Scotland had up to 170 at one time. Most are long gone, though, a few town museums still exist and many a street name tells of the former historic site in a town. After all they dealt with debt and less serious offences, more serious crimes saw perpetrators executed or transported to the colonies. Initially to America and the West Indies and after the War of Independence to Australia.

Only just under 8000 Scots were transported to Australia though more had gone elsewhere before then.

Transportation was for 7 or 15 years and Botany Bay became the destination for the prison ships, that carried their miserable human cargo around the globe. However, when Australia declined to accept any more a new system required to be devised. Convict prisons opened in England, such as the notorious Dartmoor but there were others including Chatham, Rochester, and Parkhurst. Scots convicted of serious crimes were sent there. Banishment to a foreign soil was avoided but they were harsh institutions with hard labour the norm.

As time passed and numbers rose there were calls for a distinct Scottish institution. That didn't come about through a desire for penal reform but rather that some thought Scotland was missing out on its free convict labour. Some politicians demanded that the Scottish prisoners be used in Scotland not sent south. A commission was established and various options were considered though with a preference for a North Sea port and which narrowed down to either Peterhead or Montrose, with the Aberdeenshire town winning out.

Part of Scotland's history

The North East can be a cold and bitter place in winter and conditions for convicts were austere with the climate only one of the hardships to be faced. Building started in the mid 1880's with work by paid labourers but soon thereafter the first batch of convicts arrived to help in the construction. They built the breakwater which would become the harbour, along with the rest of the prison that was to hold them. Initially there were just over 100 prisoners but that soon rose to the normal quota of 350, though a peak of 450 was reached in 1911. The granite from which the port and prison were made was extracted from a quarry at nearby Boddam, with a small railway line being built to take the prisoners to and from there.

The Naval heritage from transportation saw warders initially carrying cutlasses which was a ceremonial dress maintained by the Governor for years after it ceased to be an integral part of an officer's uniform. An early rule was that convicts couldn't approach a warder closer than a cutlass length. In due course cutlasses were dispensed with but carbines were acquired with warders patrolling armed with rifles. That continued until 1933 when an officer appears to have wounded himself and the practice ceased.

Warders initially were recruited from the military but in due course the prison, along with fishing, became the main employment in the town. Several generations often serving which applied to Governors as well. Whilst other communities opposed institutions being built, Peterhead actually fought against theirs being closed, which it was a factor in the new HMP Grampian being sited there.

Less well known than the likes of Alcatraz it's still part of Scotland's history and has a story to tell.

HM Convict Prison, Peterhead which officially opened in 1888 and now forms part of the Admiralty Gateway. Peterhead, once known as the most notorious prison in Scotland and the location of the only time the S.A.S were used in Britain to end a domestic siege after an officer was held hostage on the roof tops for 4 days. For more information on the prison and tours see: www.peterheadprisonmuseum.com

A Changing Garden

Set in over 70 acres of beautiful landscape, The Royal Botanic Garden Edinburgh is a stunning attraction at any time of year for the visitor to Edinburgh. With 100,000 plants, 70 acres, 10 Glasshouses, a history dating back nearly 350 years and panoramic views of the city it is well worth a visit, as David McVey explains.

garden grows and changes and develops, but it doesn't usually move. The Royal Botanic Garden Edinburgh (RBGE) is different, because it has moved, and more than once, too. The RBGE is many things - a focus for botanical research and scholarship, a storehouse of rare plants and other treasures but for most of us it's a place of beauty and peace near the centre of the city. Although it's a hugely popular tourist attraction (an estimated 700,000 visitors a year) it's a world away from the scrum of Princes Street or the Royal Mile; there's always space and quiet.

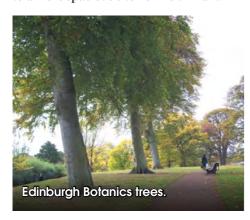

You also can't miss a feeling of permanence; just look at the many soaring trees throughout the site. Yet the garden began its life elsewhere, a long time ago.

History

The garden dates from 1670 when a 'physic garden' was begun by Dr Andrew Balfour and Dr Robert Sibbald; the latter was the first Professor of Medicine at the University of Edinburgh, while Dr Balfour was one of the founders of the College of Physicians.

The purpose of the garden in those days, then, was growing plants for medical purposes. It occupied a small site, no bigger than a large domestic garden, near the Palace of Holyrood. It later moved to the Nor' Loch, in the deep valley between the Old Town and what would become the New Town.

In 1761, John Hope, then Regius Keeper of the garden, decided to move it to a more spacious site - on Leith Walk.

Leith Walk is now a very busy urban street, but then it was open and rural. The garden had shifted to Leith Walk by 1763 and remained there until 1822, when the final (so far!) move was made to the present site at Inverleith. Little remains of the Leith Walk site, though the gardens in Hopetoun Crescent may be a remnant. There is one other reminder of the Leith Walk garden, but we'll get to that later.

The present garden is just a ten-minute bus journey from Princes Street. Enter by the East Gate and you'll soon reach the Scottish Heath Garden which, though small, enables you to suspend your disbelief and imagine yourself into a quiet corner of the Highlands, with many of the characteristic sights and smells and sounds. In fact, as you explore the RBGE, you can picture yourself on a budget world tour; to the tropics and the high summits and perhaps even to China or Japan.

After settling in the Inverleith site, the garden, as gardens do, expanded and blossomed. In 1858 it acquired its crowning glory, the Temperate Palm House, one of the largest and certainly most elegant glasshouses anywhere in the world. Behind it is the octagonal Tropical Palm House, which houses, amongst other exhibits, a Bermudan Fan Palm that has been growing in the garden since in moved here in 1822!

Botanical research and conservation

Of course, there's a serious purpose to it all. The garden is primarily a place that supports botanical research and conservation. Rare and endangered plants are propagated and grown, scientific research is conducted in the garden's laboratories, botanists' study in the garden's library and consult some of the millions of dried and preserved plants in the herbarium. The garden's researchers travel on Indiana Jones-style expeditions to study and help conserve rare species and ecosystems around the world.

The happy thing for us is that this work needs a sizeable green space so that everything from enormous pine trees to tiny mosses can be grown and displayed, in the open and under glass. I first discovered the garden when I worked in a dull job where I had to attend frequent training courses in a now-demolished building in the north of Edinburgh. Each lunchtime I would escape to the RBGE and explore the steamy tropical glasshouses or inhale the greenery-scented fresh air.

Changes in the garden reflect the interests and activities of its researchers. The Chinese Hillside, for example, demonstrates the garden's long history of partnerships with Chinese botanists and involvement in conservation work there. There is a stream and a pond and a traditional Chinese pavilion - a 'ting' - but most of all there are the plants, and particularly the rhododendrons which make this the must-see section of the garden in May.

The RBGE is many things - a focus for botanical research and scholarship, a storehouse of rare plants and other treasures but for most of us it's a place of beauty and peace near the centre of the city.

A spectacular new visitor centre and gateway building was opened in 2009 at the garden's West Gate. The John Hope Gateway (named for the Regius Keeper who supervised the move to Leith Walk) houses the garden shop, a restaurant, meeting rooms and an exhibition space all in a fascinating modern building that is worth seeing for itself. At the heart of the garden, and on its highest point, is Inverleith House, which dates from 1774 but only came into the garden's possession in 1875. For many years it housed the Scottish Gallery of Modern Art, and today continues to be used for art exhibitions. The wider garden is also a home for open air sculptures by important artists such as Barbara Hepworth and Ian Hamilton Finlay. Another feature of the garden near Inverleith House is the spectacular view of Edinburgh's historic skyline, from the Castle to Arthur's Seat; it's a stunning panorama.

Trees

Trees are perhaps the great highlight of the garden, whether you prefer the great palms in the glasshouses, the soaring pines in the arboretum, or the more familiar species you can find in the Native Woodland area, the Scottish Heath Garden and the Woodland Garden. The garden lost around 40 trees in the nightmarish gales of January 2012. I was there a few days afterwards when the garden resounded with powersaws and tractors hauled trailers piled with the chopped-up remains of fallen giants.

Each fallen tree is a loss, yet, reassuringly, each provides a space for the garden to try out something new. I was there just the other day; only seven years on, you'd never guess there had been such devastation.

The changes continue. A new Alpine House showcases mountain plants. It's a building that curiously resembles an aviary. There are ambitious plans for redevelopment of the glasshouses to support research and conservation; the Biomes Project will see significant changes to the garden's buildings in the years to come. But the garden remembers its past, too. The Botanic Cottage, built during 1764-5, was the only building on the Leith Walk site that survived, and it has now been moved, stone by stone, to Inverleith. It sits amid the Demonstration Garden and is used for community and education events. Change doesn't always have to be about the future.

One of Edinburgh's top attractions

Tours of the garden are available during the summer, but the public areas are open almost every day. There's a charge for visiting the glasshouses, but it's worth it. Every pound you spend there, or in the shop, helps make the world a better place. The RBGE has three other sites, at Dawyck in the Borders, Logan in Wigtownshire, and at Benmore in Argyll.

If you're in Edinburgh and can only spare a couple of hours, my advice is to try the RBGE. It's not just one of Edinburgh's top attractions, but you can also imagine yourself on a forest track in the Highlands, stand by a mountain stream, or surround yourself with the flora of Asia or the Alps. It's a garden tour of Scotland and the world.

Here's something to ponder if you do visit the RBGE between trains; the garden's second site, on the former Nor' Loch, is now occupied by Waverley Station!

Single strawberry shortcakes

Ingredients:

For the shortbread: 225g/8oz. plain flour 100g/3½oz. caster sugar 225g/8oz. butter, at room temperature 100g/3½oz. semolina 25g/1oz demerara sugar

For the filling:

 $500g/1lb\ 1\frac{1}{2}$ oz. strawberries, plus extra to garnish $1\frac{1}{2}$ tbsp. port

2 tbsp. caster sugar

 $300ml/10 \ensuremath{\mbox{$\!\!\!/$}}\xspace flavor flavor$

300ml/10½fl oz. thick, natural yoghurt 2 egg whites, whipped to stiff peaks extra strawberries, to garnish

Method:

Preheat the oven to 160C/320F/Gas 2. Put the flour, caster sugar, butter and semolina into a food processor and process until the mixture is thoroughly combined and comes together to form a dough. This can also be done by hand, rubbing the butter into the flour first, then adding the sugar and semolina and working the ingredients together to form a ball.

Roll the dough out on a floured surface to $1\text{-}2\text{cm}/\frac{1}{2}$ in thick. Using a circular cookie cutter or the top of a drinking glass, cut the dough into circles. Place the circles into a lightly greased tin and sprinkle the top with the demerara sugar.

Bake for 30-40 minutes, until the shortbread is pale golden and cooked through. Keep an eye on it in case it gets too brown. Allow the shortbread to cool for a few minutes then carefully lift each shortbread with a small palette knife and place on a wire rack to cool completely. (These can now be stored in an airtight container.)

Meanwhile, make the filling. Place the strawberries, port and sugar into a pan and heat gently until the sugar dissolves, stirring and mashing the strawberries into a chunky salsa. Allow to cool.

Fold together the whipped double cream, yoghurt and whipped egg white.

Fold in the strawberry salsa, leaving swirls. Place one shortbread circle on a small plate and place on a large dollop of the strawberry cream.

Place one whole strawberry on top of each dollop and serve.

Fruit and chocolate fondue

Ingredients:

55g/2oz. sugar 55ml/7fl oz. water 200g/7oz. plain chocolate, broken in pieces 1 tbsp golden syrup selection of fruits cut in bite-sized pieces such as orange, banana, grapes, dates or pineapple. Method:

Heat the sugar and water in a saucepan until the sugar melts and the mixture resembles a syrup.

Melt the chocolate in a heatproof bowl set over a pan of simmering water. (Do not lot the base of the bowl touch the water.)

Stir in the golden syrup and enough sugar syrup to form a smooth sauce. (Caution: the chocolate mixture will be very hot, allow to cool a little before serving.)

Serve with the platter of fruit.

After all the food and fun of the holiday's one would think February is a quiet month, however with Valentine's Day (Feb. 14th) it certainly is going to be a tasty month!

Macaroons

Ingredients:

125g/4oz. ground almonds 200g/7oz. icing sugar 3 free-range egg whites 2 tbsp. caster sugar ½ tsp cream of tartar pinch red powdered food colouring

For the chocolate filling

200g/7oz. dark chocolate, chopped 200ml/7fl oz. double cream 1 tsp brandy 15g/½oz. unsalted butter

Method:

Blend the ground almonds and icing sugar in a food processor until well combined. Set aside.

Using an electric whisk, slowly whisk the egg whites in a large bowl at a low speed until stiff peaks form when the whisk is removed. Slowly whisk in the cream of tartar and caster sugar until the mixture is smooth and glossy, increasing the speed of the whisk as the mixture stiffens.

Gently fold in the food colouring and blended ground almonds and icing sugar until the mixture resembles shaving foam.

Spoon the macaroon mixture into a piping bag fitted with a 1cm/½in round nozzle. Pipe 5cm/2in circles onto the baking tray lined with greaseproof paper. If a peak forms, wet your finger and smooth it down. Sharply tap the bottom of the tray to release any air bubbles from the macaroons, then set aside for 60 minutes (the macaroon shells are ready to go in the oven when they are no longer sticky to the touch).

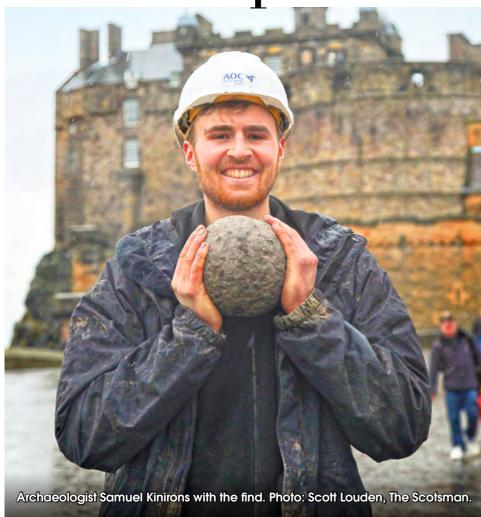

Meanwhile, preheat the oven to $160C/315F/Gas 2\frac{1}{2}$.

Bake the macaroons in the oven for 10-15 minutes, or until cooked through. Remove from the oven and set aside to cool for 5 minutes. Carefully peel away the greaseproof paper and set aside to cool completely.

Meanwhile, for the chocolate filling, heat the double cream and chocolate in a saucepan over a low heat, stirring occasionally, until smooth and well combined. Add the brandy and butter and stir until smooth, then remove from the heat and set aside to cool completely.

Use the filling to sandwich the macaroons together then chill in the fridge for 30 minutes.

Grassmarket finding could shed light on the capture of Edinburgh Castle rchaeologists believe a late medieval discovery in Edinburgh could shed new light on Edward I's Siege of Edinburgh.

An excavation in the Grassmarket has unearthed rare remains of a large carved stone similar in appearance to a cannon ball dating to the 13th century, more than 200 years before the introduction of gunpowder or cannons in Scotland.

It is thought the ball was launched from a large wooden catapult known as a trebuchet, either from or towards the ramparts of Edinburgh Castle in the period of the Siege of Edinburgh in 1296. A significant event in Scottish history, the Siege saw Edward I capture Edinburgh Castle and hold it under English rule for 18 years, plundering treasure from across Scotland including the Stone of Destiny in the process.

The finding was made as archaeologists from AOC Archaeology continue to investigate the site, which has been earmarked for Europe's first Virgin Hotel. It is hoped the new 225-room Virgin Hotel Edinburgh will be open by 2020. Work began to dig the area in May and is expected to continue into the new year.

A remarkable find

Councillor Donald Wilson, Culture and Communities Convener, said: "I never fail to be astonished by the discoveries made by archaeologists in Edinburgh but this really is a remarkable find. Unearthed in the shadow of the Castle in the Grassmarket, and aged at 700-800 years old, the evidence seems to point to this catapult ball being fired during the Siege of Edinburgh. It just goes to show how important it is that we take the opportunity with every major development in the city to investigate what's underneath with a thorough excavation – well done to everyone involved."

Richard Conolly, of CgMs, said: "As archaeologists, most of our work deals with the remnants of day to day life. So, it is really exciting for the team to find something that potentially provides a direct link to an historic event and specific date. The siege only lasted three days – we don't often get that kind of precision in our dating. It is also a reminder that it was not just the castle that was involved in the siege; the surrounding town must also have taken a battering."

The Siege of Edinburgh

Nick Finnigan, Executive Manager at Edinburgh Castle, said: "This is an exciting new discovery which helps contribute to our understanding of Edinburgh Castle's remarkable history - particularly during the Wars of Independence. Edinburgh Castle has been besieged more than any other castle in the UK and it's incredible that we are still uncovering artefacts from these historic sieges."

City of Edinburgh Council Archaeologist, John Lawson, added: "It looks like the type of ball which would have been fired by a trebuchet, one of the most powerful catapults used in the Middle Ages. Worldwide, the most famous account of a trebuchet is that of Warwolf, the giant catapult used by Edward I's army at Stirling Castle in 1304.

Unearthed in the shadow of the Castle in the Grassmarket, and aged at 700-800 years old, the evidence seems to point to this catapult ball being fired during the Siege of Edinburgh.

What we've discovered here suggests similar weapons were also used in Edinburgh, possibly even during Edward I's Siege of Edinburgh in 1296, when the Stone of Destiny was stolen and the Castle taken out of Scottish hands. We always knew this area of the Grassmarket could shed new light on Edinburgh in the dark ages, and here we are with the discovery of a medieval weapon. It's a really exciting find, particularly if we can prove its links to the Siege of Edinburgh."

survey commissioned by conservation charity the National Trust for Scotland reveals overwhelming support for greater measures to protect Scotland's most scenic landscapes.

The online survey of a sample of 1,229 people representative of Scotland's population by age and gender was commissioned by the Trust from Mark Diffley Consultancy and Research to mark four decades of National Scenic Areas.

The beauty of Scotland's landscape

National Scenic Areas (NSAs) were first identified by the then Countryside Commission for Scotland in 1978. This followed publication of Highland Landscape by WH Murray commissioned by the National Trust for Scotland in 1962 which was the first national assessment of Scotland's most scenic areas. It came from a strong desire to protect the beauty of Scotland's landscape and enable 'economic' and 'amenity' factors to be weighed evenly on the scales.

Among the findings of the survey are:

- 95% strongly/tend to agree that scenic areas are vital for tourism;
- 91% strongly/tend to agree that scenic landscapes make them proud to live in Scotland;
- 92% strongly/tend to agree that there should be restrictions on large-scale industrial development in Scotland's most important landscapes;
- 84% strongly/tend to agree that the planning system should include more measures to protect National Scenic Areas

This is a strong consensus voice. Location, social background, age and gender made virtually no difference to the opinions expressed through the survey. It was also clear that respondents were unaware of or confused by the many different designations intended to protect landscapes in Scotland: for example, 88% were 'definitely aware' of National Parks whereas the percentage for National Scenic Areas was only 20% and 23% for Wild Land Areas.

When asked whether "most new development in the countryside is having a positive impact on Scotland's scenic landscapes," less than a quarter (23%) of respondents agreed, with 29% neutral, and 33% disagreeing. This suggests there is opportunity – and a need – for better planning and design to ensure the sustainable development of our landscapes.

Scotland's determination to see the landscapes they love properly protected

The National Trust for Scotland's Head of Conservation and Policy, Stuart Brooks said: "While the social and economic situation and types of pressure have changed since 1978, it's abundantly clear that one thing has been constant: the people of Scotland's determination to see the landscapes they love properly protected. It's been 40 years since National Scenic Areas were established, and up to this point they have been largely effective. Their amenity value has grown enormously within that time to the point where they are key economic drivers for Scotland. This is bringing wealth and opportunity to rural communities - whether as places to live or drawing visitors from around the world.

"Technological advances to produce and distribute clean energy to help combat climate change is necessary but presents new challenges to protecting our landscapes and this is a concern for people as demonstrated through this poll. There's an immediate opportunity through the Planning Bill currently before Parliament to ensure our National Scenic Areas and Wild Land Areas are future proofed to ensure they continue to protect the beauty of our landscape and support our economy and communities. Let's also look beyond the Highlands and begin a discussion about the value of landscapes everywhere and the role their stewardship can play in the health and prosperity of our nation."

Most special parts of Scotland

The Director of The Association for the Protection of Rural Scotland (APRS), John Mayhew said: "Scotland's National Scenic Areas are the jewels in our nation's crown. They represent the finest examples of the types of landscape for which Scotland is renowned around the world. When wellmanaged, as they have been in Galloway, they can enhance the special qualities of the local landscape, support the local economy and inspire pride and passion amongst local people. They have played a key role over the years in resisting inappropriate development, such as the Harris superquarry.

"This new research is welcome, as it shows how much the people of Scotland value the beauty of their landscapes. It is also timely, as this year we celebrate 40 years since the Scotland's Scenic Heritage report which led to the NSAs. But most of our NSAs would benefit from more funding, better publicity and more positive management. Now that we have seen once more how much people value them, we urge all concerned to redouble their efforts to look after these most special parts of Scotland."

Thriller Queen - New Mary Queen of Scots film places Scotland locations and history in spotlight here's something about Mary, Queen of Scots: she's everywhere in Scotland, from her birthplace at Linlithgow Palace; to Craignethan Castle, near Lanark, said to be one of her regular 'haunts' (quite literally); and Edinburgh, as she hangs quite defiantly on display at the Scottish National Portrait Gallery. All places history fans can explore on a trip to Scotland.

In 2019 a brand new film, Mary Queen of Scots which stars Saoirse Ronan as the titular Queen, and Margot Robbie as her second cousin and rival monarch Elizabeth I – inspires renewed interest in a tumultuous period of British history and offers the perfect excuse to explore Scotland and the many fascinating historical connections to Mary Stuart, as well as some the stunning filming locations used in the film.

The film explores Mary's difficulty in asserting her authority in Scotland, with threats from protestants (including from John Knox, played in the film by David Tennant), and from the English Queen, struggling herself to be a Queen in a man's country. Strong female roles are brought to life by two brilliant leading actresses, as well as a female director, Josie Rourke, and producer Debra Hayward.

Director Josie Rourke said of filming in Scotland: "We wanted to do as much as possible in Scotland and to show Mary in that environment and what her journey with it is. During the film, she comes to a deeper understanding and love of her country, so she had to be outside in it and witness the epic sweep of that landscape. Scotland is an extraordinary country, and it matches the scale of the story and the scale of what happens to Mary at certain points in the film. We just wanted to show Scotland in all of its incredible glory."

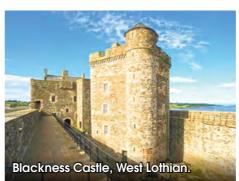

What's more, fans of the movie can continue their Scotland experience with a choice of Mary, Queen of Scots events across the country to tie in with the big screen release.

Filming locations open to visitors in Scotland included in the film are: Strathdon, Aberdeenshire-Lying in Upper Donside, around 45 miles west of Aberdeen, Strathdon is a stunning and quiet part of Scotland and a superb place for spotting wildlife. It is an area steeped in history and visitors can learn more at Corgarff Castle with its fascinating star-shaped fortifications, and at Glenbuchat Castle. In the summer spot the Lonach Highlanders parading through Bellabeg, the main village in the area, as they make their way to the Lonach Gathering. In winter, there's skiing and snowboarding on offer at The Lecht Ski Centre. During the production of Mary, Queen of Scots, filming included a scene at Poldullie Bridge, Strathdon in which the Queen Mary gets ambushed: a fight scene with cows blocking the bridge.

The East Lothian landscape- To the east of Edinburgh and within very easy reach of the city, lie the craggy cliffs, golden beaches and rolling countryside of East Lothian. Hemmed in by the Firth of Forth to the north and the Lammermuir Hills to the south, the history of the area is typified by the stronghold of Tantallon Castle as it rests formidably on cliffs above Seacliff Bay. The area is also very popular with golfers and must-visit attractions include the Scottish Seabird Centre, National Museum of Flight and Glenkinchie Distillery to name just a few.

Seacliff Beach, North Berwick, East Lothian-With the ruins of Tantallon Castle perched above it, the beautiful Seacliff Beach is found near the East Lothian town of North Berwick. Seacliff is privately owned and there's a small charge to access it, but it's well worth a visit to discover what's thought to be the UK's smallest harbour with views of the Bass Rock. The beach also been featured in the recent Netflix release, Outlaw King, which stars Chris Pine.

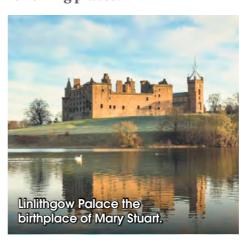

In the film, Seacliff can be seen in a scene featuring Mary and her ladies in waiting on a rocky shore, looking out to sea, speaking to one another in French.

Blackness Castle, West Lothian-This mighty fortification, jutting out into the Firth of Forth with its long and narrow design, has been described as 'the ship that never sailed'. It owes much of its nautical shape to the many fortifications that were added to it during the 16th century, transforming it into one of the most secure fortresses of its time – part of its south-facing wall is 5.5 metres thick! Now a popular visitor attraction, the castle has served as a garrison, state prison and also featured in season one of Outlander as well as Outlaw King.

The photogenic Cairngorms and Glen Coe are also featured in the film, as Mary and her army ride across Moorlands.

Explore the history of Mary, Queen of Scots, including the following places:

Linlithgow Palace-These historic ruins, once a royal 'pleasure palace', surrounded by peaceful gardens and grounds, were also the birthplace of Mary Stuart. The site was first occupied as far back as Roman times, 2,000 years ago. There has been a royal residence here since at least the reign of David I (1124–53). He also founded the town that grew up around the royal residence.

Stirling Castle- Mary spent the first few years of her life, from 27 July 1543, within the safe confines of this castle and in the hands of her guardian Lord Erskine, to February 1548, when she was moved to Dumbarton Castle and eventually shipped to France. It is here, in the Old Chapel, where she was crowned Queen of Scots on 9 September 1543, aged nine months. The ceremony consisted of the quick investiture of the child in the presence of the nobility.

Scottish National Portrait GalleryThe painting of Mary, Queen of Scots, by an unknown artist, is said to give some clues as to her imprisonment and execution. Famed for her tall and elegant appearance, the captive yet dignified Mary seems to tower above those who look at her in the painting. She stands on a Turkish-style carpet and her pale and slightly weary features are set against a dark background, accentuated by her black velvet dress with its elaborate lace cuffs and a diaphanous cloak.

National Museum of Scotland-The museum has a vast selection of objects associated with Mary. History fans can explore her dramatic story and separate out the facts from the myths that have built up over the centuries. Included in their selection of items is a harp, or clarsach, made in the 15th century and said to be to have been given by Mary, Queen of Scots to Beatrix Gardyne of Banchory, while on a hunting trip to Atholl, circa 1563. It is also said to have been adorned at one time with a gold portrait of Mary, which could be the real reason for its association with her.

Craignethan Castle-There are various stories of places in Scotland – and elsewhere in the UK – of places the ghost of Mary, Queen of Scots is said to haunt; Craignethan Castle (where Mary is said to have spent the night before the battle of Langside in 1568) has one of those stories. Visitors at the Lanarkshire castle have reportedly seen a headless woman walking in the grounds, who some believe to be the Scottish Queen.

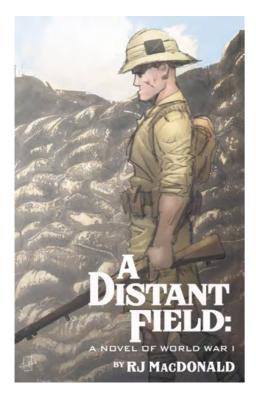

Mary Queen of Scots Visitor Centre-Located in a 16th century tower house in the centre of the historic town of Jedburgh in the Scottish Borders, the visitor centre reflects the proud association of the town with Mary who stayed there in 1566. The building was bought in 1927 by the town of Jedburgh as it had always been linked with Mary's stay on an official tour when she became seriously ill after riding to Hermitage Castle to visit Bothwell, her supposed lover. Each room has a different focus. The Rogues' Gallery introduces the individuals in the drama of Mary's life, whilst the Last Letter Room reveals Mary's final thoughts.

America's Great War Highlanders

RJ MacDonald lives in the East Neuk of Fife, Scotland. He left Scotland as a teenager and spent sixteen years in America enlisting in the US Marines Reserves after graduating from UC Berkeley. He returned to Scotland to complete two masters degrees and was commissioned into the Royal Air Force Reserves. A veteran of Iraq and Libya, he now serves on a volunteer lifeboat, tasked with a 24/7 all-weather maritime search and rescue role in some of the world's roughest seas.

"Though our homes are far across the seas, our hearts and souls are Scottish..." Lt Col Guthrie, 1918.

he mornings were cold in November 1917, so it's easy to imagine the scene- Her Majesty's Troopship Canada arrives at Liverpool docks, England. Soon lines of soldiers, burdened down with kit and rifles, are disembarking down the gangplanks. They form up into ranks, glad to be on dry land again, and with a nod from their commanding officer to the pipe major, the drone of bagpipes tuning up carries through the still air. Then, to the command of, "By the right, Quick March!" the men of the 236th MacLean Kilties of America march smartly away from the docks to the sound of their own pipes and drums. America's Great War Highlanders had arrived.

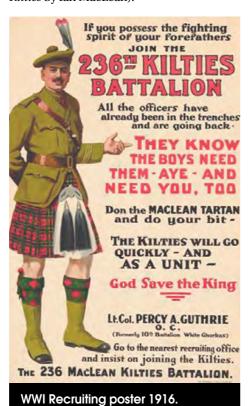

Author RJ Macdonald in Iraq.

Americans serving in the Canadian Forces were commonplace during WWI. Three battalions, the 97th, 211th and 213th, all designated 'American Legion', had been raised and deployed to France. But the 236th Battalion was special- it wore kilts. It was the brainchild of a Canadian- Lieutenant Colonel Percy Guthrie. While lying wounded in France, he heard a Scottish battalion passing by, pipes and drums leading the way. At that moment he resolved to raise a battalion of Highlanders.

Americans serving in the Canadian Forces were commonplace during WWI. Three battalions, the 97th, 211th and 213th, all designated 'American Legion', had been raised and deployed to France. But the 236th Battalion was special- it wore kilts.

On return home to Canada, he gained official support and in May 1916, the 236th New Brunswick Kilties (MacLean Highlanders) were raised. Needing men to fill its ranks, Guthrie's gaze quickly turned to New England following America's entry into the war. With a quick change of name and cap badges, the 236th Maclean Kilties of America appealed to Scots-Americans from Maine to Boston for recruits and within eleven days the Highland battalion had over-filled its ranks (The MacLean Kilties by Ian MacLean).

Fought in every major battle Having arrived in Great Britain, the battalion trained hard, under the expert eyes of its officers and non-commissioned officers- all veterans of the Western Front. In March 1918, they deployed to France. A cruel blow awaited them. Despite vehement protests, the battalion was effectively split into three to feed the constant need for re-enforcements. The Canadians from New Brunswick were allowed to join the New Brunswick Regiment.

The rest, including the Scots-Americans, were divided between the Royal Highlanders of Canada and the Seaforth Highlanders of Canada, in which they would go on to fight in every major battle for the remainder of the war, suffering 553 casualties, (Percy Guthrie and the MacLean Kilties by Paul Belliveau).

In 2006 a memorial plaque to the 236th Maclean Kilties of America was unveiled at their old headquarters building in Fredericton, New Brunswick. A memorial to all Americans who fought in the Canadian Forces during WWI was dedicated in 1927 at Arlington National Cemetery; the pipes and drums of the 48th Highlanders of Canada played at the ceremony.

RJ MacDonald's WWI historical novel, A Distant Field, was released on November 11th, 2018. The first in a series, it follows Stuart and Ross McReynolds, Scots-Americans who survive the sinking of the Lusitania. Together with four Irishmen, a Canadian, and a young English officer, they join Scotland's Seaforth Highlanders and head towards the bloody battlefields of WWI.
