The Banner Says...

A call to protect Scotland's heritage

by Sean Cairney

he call has literally been made recently across mainly rural parts of Scotland to save the iconic red call box. In fact, across Britain telephone bosses and community groups are looking at ways to save one of most recognisable cultural symbols of the country.

The first red phone boxes were installed in 1921, but the red telephone box we have come to know (the Jubilee kiosks, commemorating the Silver Jubilee of the coronation of King George V) was designed by Sir Giles Gilbert Scott, following a competition in 1924.

However, as technology has leaped forward, with most of the Scottish public having mobile phones, the need for call boxes has seen a massive reduction creating a unique 21st century problem. Calls made from public telephones have fallen by around 90% in the past decade and the costs to maintain them continues to increase. With BT (British Telecom) now closing call boxes across the country (650 have been removed this year so far), with the Highlands and Scottish Borders most impacted. There are today just over 31,000 BT payphones still in place across the UK, but in Scotland one in five call boxes will be closed, leaving just 3,300 active phones.

A significant part in Britain's national heritage It is the Scottish communities in rural areas that have the most concern, to lose what could for some be a lifeline. Not all communities have reliable mobile reception and rely on the trusted call boxes as a communication back up.

Also depending on what decade you were born, you may or not, be surprised to read some older Scots do not use mobile phones and rely on telephones. This is a further hit for rural Scottish communities as some have also lost a variety of essential services such as post offices, banks and the Scottish invention of ATM's. BT however has said it will not remove any payphones on the Scottish islands or in areas where there was no mobile coverage.

Adopt a Kiosk

Understanding that the red telephone box plays a significant part in Britain's national heritage and in many cases forms a focal point for communities across the country, BT is offering communities the opportunity to keep these kiosks. Since the Adopt a Kiosk programme was launched, more than 2,300 communities across the UK have seized the opportunity to do something wonderful with local phone boxes that had little or no usage. For just £1 communities can give their local red phone box a new lease of life as something completely different.

Adopted kiosks have been adapted to include a book exchange, art gallery, grocery shop, a bakery, a wildlife information centre, a coffee shop and even lifesaving defibrillators in some local boxes. BT will continue to provide electricity (if already in place) to power the light for adopted kiosks, free of charge to communities. In Scotland over 700 call boxes are available under the Adopt a Kiosk programme.

In this issue

Festive fun is certainly a thread in this issue as we look at how the Scottish capital will be celebrating both Christmas and Hogmanay. I have spent these holidays in Scotland before and have great memories of being at Edinburgh's Hogmanay or going for a cool but lovely Christmas walk around Glasgow University with my family. Of course, Scotland really puts a show on for Hogmanay like nowhere else.

Clearly Christmas would not be complete without reindeer.

They surely must have one of the world's most important transport jobs this month and we are lucky the team at Cairngorm Reindeer Herd took the time to speak to us about these majestic creatures who live in one of the most stunning areas of Scotland.

I was surprised to learn that the classic A Christmas Carol, written by Charles Dickens in the 1843 was inspired from a visit he made to an Edinburgh grave. The main character of the classic book is the meanspirited man Ebenezer Scrooge who famously gets a visit from the ghosts of Christmas present, past and future. Ebenezer Lennox Scroggie was a wealthy vintner and meal man (a corn merchant), and as was customary in Scotland at the time, when he died his trade was etched on his gravestone for all to see. In 1841 Charles Dickens was visiting Edinburgh on a lecture tour and he strolled around Canongate Kirkyard. There he noticed an unusual inscription on a gravestone which said, "Here lies Ebenezer Lennox Scroggie, A Meal Man". However, what Dickens read was "A Mean Man", with that Scroggie eventually became immortalised as Scrooge to millions of people in A Christmas Carol.

For hundreds of years in Scotland during the 16 and 1700's thousands of women were branded as witches and often burned at the stake, strangled or drowned. The suspected 'witches' were defined as witches by their neighbours, through a process of gossip and quarrelling. Witches were believed to be malicious and vengeful and have devil like powers. If someone suffered a misfortune after a quarrel, they might conclude that the other person had bewitched them in revenge. Unlike most criminal trials, witch trials permitted the torture of suspected women until a confession was extracted. In this issue we learn of Lilias Adie, who was Scotland's only 'witch' to have a grave and how history is remembering her today.

Happy Christmas

As we all prepare for the festive season ahead, all of us that work on the Scottish Banner wish all our readers, advertisers and friends the very best for the holidays.

And whilst many will spend too much, and possibly eat even more, try and remember the simple joys of the season, spending time with friends and family and perhaps looking out for those who are alone or in need. What ever you do, and where ever you spend it, I hope you find some of the magic of the holiday's surrounds you. Happy Christmas & Hogmanay!

Ten things you might not know about Hogmanay

Find out why a visit from a dark-haired man on New Year's Day is good luck, along with some other fascinating facts about Scotland's Hogmanay.

Edinburgh's Hogmanay celebrations.

- 1 Hogmanay is the Scots word for the last day of the year and is synonymous with the celebrating the year in true Scottish style. Edinburgh's Hogmanay Street Party is famous around the world, with visitors travelling from around Scotland and beyond to soak up the Scottish celebrations.
- 2 Nobody knows for sure where the word 'Hogmanay' came from. It may have originated from Gaelic or from Norman-French. What we do know, is that in Scotland, it means a good time surrounded by friends, ceilidh dancing and laughter.

- 3 Historically, Christmas was not observed as a festival in Scotland and Hogmanay was the more traditional celebration.

 Nowadays, Christmas is widely celebrated, with Hogmanay signalling that the festive period is coming to an end and a new year is beginning.
- 4 'The Bells' is the phrase used to describe the midnight hour when New Year's Eve becomes New Year's Day. It stems from the noise the church bells make as the clock strikes midnight signalling the beginning of a new day and a new year.
- 5 Famous Scottish poet Robert Burns' Auld Lang Syne is sung to celebrate the start of the New Year at the stroke of midnight, not just in Scotland but in many countries around the world.
- 6 The Guinness Book of World Records lists Auld Lang Syne as one of the most frequently sung songs in English.

 The song is sung or played in many movies, from festive blockbuster It's a Wonderful Life to romantic comedy When Harry Met Sally.
- 7 To sing Auld Lang Syne a circle is created and hands are joined with the person on each side of you.

- At the beginning of the last verse, everyone crosses their arms across their breast, so that the right hand reaches out to the neighbour on the left and vice versa. When the tune ends, everyone rushes to the middle, while still holding hands.
- 8 An important element of Hogmanay celebrations is to welcome friends and strangers, with warm hospitality and of course a kiss to wish everyone a 'Guid New Year'. The underlying belief is to clear out the vestiges of the old year, have a clean break and welcome in a young, New Year on a happy note.
- 9 'First Footing' the 'first foot' in the house after midnight is still very common is Scotland. To ensure good luck, a first footer should be a darkhaired male. Fair-haired first footers were not particularly welcome after the Viking invasions of ancient times. Traditional gifts include a lump of coal to lovingly place on the host's fire, along with shortbread, a black bun and whisky to toast to a Happy New Year.
- 10 To first foot a household empty-handed is considered grossly discourteous, never mind unlucky! You must not only bring yourself, but a gift of some description for the kind host. Consider yourself sufficiently warned!

Edinburgh Castle becomes 'Castle of Light'

istory is set to come to life at Edinburgh Castle this winter, as the iconic landmark is illuminated with tales from Scotland's past. The mesmerising 90-minute journey of light, sound and wonder, entitled Castle of Light, will treat guests to an evening of dazzling animations, never seen before at the castle in its 900 year history. Running throughout the festive season to Sunday 22nd December, the castle will be transformed using state-of-the-art projections and enchanting storytelling.

The event which will be the biggest light experience to hit the city centre, bringing together a consortium of the finest digital and visual talent in Scotland to create a truly immersive experience which will captivate locals and visitors alike every Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

History, geology, mythology and the sheer drama

Gillian Macdonald, Head of Business Development at Historic Environment
Scotland (HES), which operates Edinburgh Castle, said: "Castle of Light invites visitors to watch the history of this iconic landmark come to life as it illuminates the very walls that saw it unfold. Guests will have the chance to follow in the footsteps of Scotland's heroes as they're welcomed by stunning visuals and impressive lighting installations within the Castle's walls.
Using state-of-the-art projections to create a truly wonderful, immersive lighting adventure, this is sure to be a magical experience for all the family and we can't wait for everyone to enjoy it."

Andy McGregor, Creative Director of Castle of Light, said: "This is an amazing opportunity to create a major lighting projection event for the truly iconic site that is Edinburgh Castle - a place recognised throughout the world and one which embodies so much Scottish history. I grew up by the Meadows in the shadow of this rock but I'm now seeing the Castle with fresh eyes. As a team, we will be drawing on the history, geology, mythology and the sheer drama of the site to conjure a spectacle that we hope will excite, entertain and enlighten audiences of all ages and backgrounds. To a certain extent, it is like being given a set of (very big) keys to a (a very big) toy shop - but with rather more responsibility! - and we are thrilled to be involved in such an exciting project for this national treasure."

SCOT POURRI

Send us your inquiries on life's little question marks.

Ever wanted to know what happened to your old pal from home, how to make your favourite Scottish meal, or wondered about a certain bit of Scottish history?

Killin

For Anne, David, Kim and James Gray.

Here the centuries run like seconds, skies of cloud and countless suns scud in time-lapse overhead. Long swathes of time etch their histories on the hillsides, the stones of the river bed... This valley gouged by ice felt one day the thaw begin, grew gradually green, inhabited and echoes now this summer with the bleating of black-faced sheep. When did the last ice melt away and the glacier leave its footprint here, this small deep loch holding in silence its complement of brown trout and the elusive char? Such questions disappear in the wind whispering at night through Henry's wood, or dissolve in the brown water rounding old stones, the river's slow revenge on glacial imprisonment. Here the summer dark is brief and light, laughter and stories dance together in the Lodge ... but in Winter, if the mood is right, the ice will reassert itself and whip the length of glen to gale, from the blind face of Strone to Garrogie's spruce towers. Each winter brings this inkling back of what once was, a cold hackling in the early dark of how things were for time beyond remembering.

© Graham Wood

This poem was written for good friends of mine whose family have a lodge in the small glen near Loch Killin in the Monadhliath mountains. It is at the southern end of Loch Ness and is not to be confused with the other Killin, a village near Loch Tay. The poem celebrates the glacial origins of the glen and the fact that on some days in winter, it is impossible to escape the memory of the ice. In Summer, the lodge is a very friendly place with extended family visiting from all over the world. And in any season, the glen and the loch display the stark beauty characteristic of the Scottish Highlands.

Ed note: Thanks Graham for sharing such an atmospheric piece with us.

Looking to correspond with many like-minded people

Greetings from Adelaide, Australia. I have recently subscribed to this wonderful newspaper and am thoroughly enjoying each paper received monthly. I have also purchased a few CD's/clothing from this site also and am extremely pleased not just with the product selection and the prompt and safe delivery, but also the prompt replies to my enquiries. I will be travelling over to beautiful Scotland again in four weeks (this being my 4th trip) and this time heading to the Outer Hebrides, as well as Skye, Islay and the Orkneys. Looking forward to staying in the Bowmore Cottages again and tasting those peaty whisky's from Islay.

Would love to correspond with many like-minded people across the miles. I love music whisky, haggis, travelling, animals and photography. Favourite music: Red Hot Chilli Pipers, Runrig, Royal Scots Dragoon Guards and Capercaille.

Absence makes the art grow fonder in Aberdeen berdeen Art Gallery has reopened following a once-in a lifetime multimillion pound investment to create a major cultural attraction in the heart of the Granite City. This world-class arts complex, which aims to be a must-visit attraction for both local residents and tourists alike. The historic Grade-A listed buildings have been re-imagined as an exciting visitor destination which blends the historic with the contemporary. Visitor access, orientation and facilities have been dramatically improved, including the addition of a stunning new rooftop café.

The new Gallery will see dramatically increased display space for its nationally-recognised collection, with the number of galleries increasing from 11 to 19 and a further three galleries presenting a programme of regularly-changing special exhibitions. The number of items from the permanent collection on display has increased from 370 in 2015 to 1,080 in 2019.

Aberdeen's cultural renaissance
Jo Robinson, VisitScotland Regional Director, said: "The reopening of the gallery is a hugely exciting time for Aberdeen. It is the culmination of years of planning, designing and reimagining
a showstopper attraction that will underpin Aberdeen's cultural renaissance. The opening offers a real opportunity for civic pride at a time when the Granite City – renowned the world over as Europe's oil capital – is moving in a new direction, becoming a credible player on Scotland's leisure tourism stage.

We need to create world-class experiences, events and attractions to keep up with the ever-changing visitor demands. Visitors of all ages and backgrounds will be able to enjoy the enhanced programme of exhibitions at the new Gallery. Tourism is more than a holiday experience - it is the heartbeat of the Aberdeen and Aberdeenshire economy, touching every community, generating income, jobs and social change. Scotland's reputation as a quality destination relies on continued investment to ensure that current provision meets future demand. The refurbishment of Aberdeen Art Gallery will be a game-changer for the city's tourism offering, attracting new visitors and drawing past visitors back to Aberdeen."

The Gallery is expected to attract upwards of 250,000 visits per year making it one of the North-East's most popular unpaid visitor attractions with the potential to generate an additional £1.1m spend in the wider local economy.

For further information about Aberdeen Art Gallery, visit: www.aagm.co.uk

Aberdeen Art Aberdeen Art Gallery has reopened to the public following a major transformation.

- First footing The 'first foot' in the house after midnight is still very common in Scotland. To ensure good luck, a first footer should be a darkhaired man. Fair-haired first footers were not particularly welcome after the Viking invasions of ancient times. Traditional gifts include a lump of coal to lovingly place on the host's fire, along with shortbread, a black bun and whisky to toast to a Happy New Year. These days shortbread and whisky will suffice. Showing up empty handed is not only very rude but also bad luck!
- Redding the house Rather than a Spring clean, the Scots have a New Year's clean to welcome in the New Year. Starting the New Year with a dirty house is bad luck. When open fires were common, people would clear the ashes and lay a new fire for the New Year. Cleaning one's house also extends to clearing one's debts. An old Scottish superstition states that you should try to clear all your debts before the stroke of midnight.
- Bonfires and Fire Festivals- Scotland's fire festivals at Hogmanay and later in January may have pagan or Viking origins. The use of fire to purify and drive away evil spirits is an ancient idea. Fire is at the centre of Hogmanay celebrations in Stonehaven, Comrie and Biggar and has recently become an element in Edinburgh's Hogmanay celebration.
- The singing of Auld Lang Syne all over the world- People sing Robert Burns' version of this traditional Scottish air. How it became the New Year's song is something of a mystery. At Edinburgh's Hogmanay, people join hands for what is reputed to be the world's biggest Auld Lang Syne.
- The Saining of the House-This is a very old rural tradition that involved blessing the house and livestock with holy water from a local stream. Although it had nearly died out, in recent years it has experienced a revival. After the blessing with water, the woman of the house was supposed to go from room to room with a smouldering juniper branch, filling the house with purifying smoke.

SCOTSPEAK

Scotspeak is a selection of quotes which made headlines in Scotland last month on a variety of current Scottish affairs.

"Brexit will disrupt existing environmental protections in Scotland, including the independent oversight of the European Commission. The National Trust for Scotland therefore welcomes the Scottish Government's commitment to examine how our protections can be sustained post-Brexit. Our own public polling found that the Scottish public favoured the creation of a new body, independent of government, and able to hold government to account, and this should be part of the government's discussions."

The National Trust for Scotland's Head of Public Policy, Diarmid Hearns said as the conservation charity the National Trust for Scotland has responded to news from the Scottish Government that in the event of a 'no deal' Brexit an environmental standards advisory panel will be established. A poll of 1,000 Scots commissioned by the charity last month found that 81 per cent of respondents said they would support or strongly support the creation of an environmental protection body to ensure that Scotland upholds similar levels of environmental protections as currently. Sixty-seven percent of those polled thought that this body should be independent of government.

"I hope someone will come along and buy it and keep it going because this is Scotland's heritage and more particularly Sanquhar's. The post office has been in operation since 1712 so it would be a shame to have to shut it down. I've enjoyed every moment of running it. The last five years has been a remarkable journey and I've enjoyed it, it's a nice area and nice people and we have visitors from all over the world."

Sanquhar postmaster Nazra Alam said as the world's oldest post office went up for sale. The branch in Sanquhar, Dumfries and Galloway, has been in continuous service since 1712. The post office pre-dates the second oldest, in Stockholm, Sweden, by eight years while the third oldest in Santiago, Chile, opened in 1772. The post office is listed at £275,000, and comes with a three-bedroom cottage, a courtyard and outbuildings. It started out as a staging post for mail carriages, with the old stables thought to have once provided a resting place for horses drawing the mail carriages.

"In addition to this impressive feat, the out-turn cost improved from the original budget of £3.2bn to a final cost of only £1.35bn. This new bridge is a worthy winner in this category and a tribute to collaborative teamwork."

Rics judge David Brooks Wilson said The Queensferry Crossing has been named as the best infrastructure project in the UK. The £1.35bn bridge over the Forth - which opened to traffic in August 2017 - won the infrastructure category at this year's Rics Awards grand final. Judges hailed the crossing - the world's longest three-towered, cablestayed bridge at 2633 metres - as a "worthy winner".

"We have felt a few in recent years but this was the worst so far, so I was surprised it was only 1.9 on the scale. My husband and I were sat on the sofa chatting, the noise was like an articulated lorry coming through the wall or a train. A few minutes later there was a second shorter one."

Glencoe resident Annie Harpur said as two small earthquakes were felt in Glencoe. The first had a magnitude of 1.9, and second with a rating of 1.7 ML.

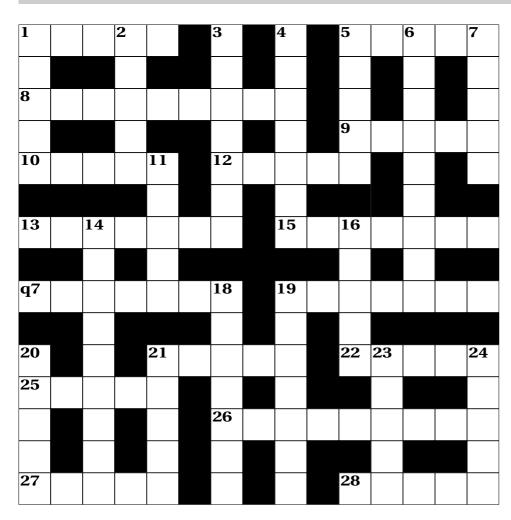

"The 1901 recipe has aged beautifully over the last 118 years. For a limited time, we'll be producing a premium 'old and unimproved' Irn-Bru 1901 just as it was enjoyed by our first fans. This is Irn-Bru as you've never tasted it. It's a chance to enjoy a unique and authentic piece of Scottish history - but don't hang about, we don't think it will be around for long."

Robin Barr, of Scottish drinks maker AG Barr, said as the Irn-Bru maker will launch a limited-edition new version it claimed was based on an original recipe from 1901. The firm said Irn-Bru 1901 - to hit shelves in December - was made from a handwritten recipe which had been "stored deep in the company archives for over 100 years".

"I'm delighted that another example of Scotland's remarkable heritage of bridge construction has become a listed structure. One of the many innovations of the Drochaid Ceasaig (Kessock Bridge) was its ability to withstand extreme weather and earthquakes resulting from the Great Glen geological fault. It also contributed significantly to driving economic growth in the area, making travel between Inverness and the far northeast significantly easier. We have such a strong heritage of bridge building in Scotland and the Drochaid Ceasaig (Kessock Bridge) is an important part of that distinguished tradition."

Elizabeth McCrone, Head of Designations at Historic Environment Scotland (HES), said as The Drochaid Ceasaig (Kessock Bridge) near Inverness has been awarded category B status by HES after it was recognised as being of special architectural interest. A major piece of 20th century engineering, it was the first multi-cable-stayed bridge to be built in the United Kingdom, and at the time of its completion in 1982 was the largest of its type in Europe. The Drochaid Ceasaig (Kessock Bridge) was also among the first to apply special 'quake-proof' technology, designed to allow for seismic and geological movement from the Great Glen Fault. This is the third bridge in Scotland to be listed by HES in the last 12 months, following The Erskine Bridge and Drochaid a' Chaolais Chumhaing (Kylesku Bridge).

Snow Better Place to Be...

ith so much to do, only in Scotland is there a reason to stay longer. From befriending reindeer in the UK's only wild reindeer herd, to toasting the national bard with a dram; to partying through a three-day Hogmanay celebration, to basking in the glow of a traditional Celtic fire festival adventurers, comfort-seekers and revellers will never be short of unique and exciting experiences in Scotland this winter.

Scotland is a beautiful and exciting place to visit all year round, but there is something special about driving through a mist-covered glen or catching a sunset over the snow dusted mountains. As the days get shorter and the temperature drops, Scotland doesn't go into hibernation... the party is just getting started.

Here is just a pick of the one-of-a-kind and unforgettable events and experiences happening from this month, into the New Year:

Feel the heat (of a fire festival)

Winter in Scotland might sound like a chilly time, but there is a lot to experience off-season. From October onwards, there is a huge variety of unique and traditional fire festivals held all over the country. Catch the Samhuinn Fire Festival which celebrates the Celtic New Year on top of Edinburgh's iconic Calton Hill with a dramatic mix of dance, immersive theatre and fire play. Head north to Up Helly Aa Viking Festival in the small town of Lerwick in the Shetland Isles and see the burning of the long ship on the last Tuesday in January (one of 12 fire festivals taking place in January). These unique experiences guarantee to keep participants and spectators alike warm on a cold night.

Scotland is known for its wide range of outdoor activities and that doesn't stop in winter, in fact- it enhances it. Dust off the cobwebs on 1st January with the famous Loony Dook in South Queensferry by joining the brave participants in throwing themselves into the freezing Firth of Forth waters. Why not try curling in the country it was invented in or ski and snowboard across the Cairngorm mountains? Scotland is home to five world-class ski resorts.

Getting festive

Scotland loves a festival, and they're not just for the summer months. Celtic Connections brings the very best of Celtic, folk and roots music from all over the world to Glasgow. The 18 day-long festival event draws over 2,000 musicians and uses over 33 of the UNESCO City of Music's iconic venues during the month of January. The Oban Winter festival is a 10-day long event that is jammed pack full of markets, parades, live music, exhibitions and much more. Oban is compact and easy to get around, so this festival is a great opportunity to get in the festive spirit and discover all the brilliant attractions that Oban has to offer.

'Hogmanay', or New Year's Eve, is a uniquely Scottish experience, and Edinburgh is known all over the world for throwing legendary Hogmanay celebrations along its cobbled streets and its residents and visitors dancing into the early hours of the morning.

However, the rest of Scotland is also embracing this time to party like nowhere else: head north and party at the Red-Hot Highland Fling in Inverness. This free family-friendly event attracts over 10,000 spectators and brings the very best Scottish music acts to the Highland Capital to help bring in the New Year. The exciting and traditional Stonehaven Fireballs Festival lights up the small town on the east coast with a procession of approximately 40 men and women swinging fireballs above their heads when the clock strikes midnight on New Year's Eve. Also, don't forget the 'First-foot' custom, which arguably began in Scotland: it's said that the first-footer must be out of the house before the clock strikes midnight, then cross the threshold to welcome in the new year, bearing gifts. Traditional items for the first-footer to carry include pieces of coal, a coin, salt, bread, and a 'wee dram' of whisky.

Making new friends

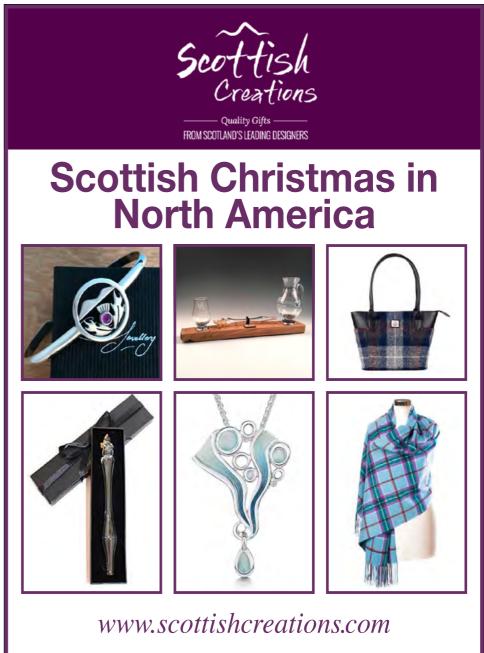

Winter in Scotland is a great time to spot wildlife and make a furry friend or two. The Cairngorm Sled dog Centre in Aviemore is the UK's only designated sled dog centre which offer visitors the ultimate sled dog experience, this involves helping the kennel with their daily routine and a 50-minute training session with the huskies through remote forest trails- a one of kind way to see the cairngorm mountains.

Visit the UK's only wild reindeer herd in the Glenmore Forest Park with an experienced herder and pet and befriend the cute and cuddly reindeer- this unique experience will get any scrooge feeling festive in no time.

Burns, baby, Burns

It's not just Christmas and New Year we celebrate in Scotland. On 30th November, Scotland celebrates its patron saint, St Andrew, with a wide variety of events and celebrations all over the country from parties in the town named after the saint himself to rural ceilidhs on the Isle of Skye. Fun lovers are never far away from a party at this time of year. Another thing Scotland is celebrated for is its creativity so, on 25th January each year there is Burns Night where haggis, whisky and famous prose are combined to celebrate the life and work of our national bard, Robert Burns. The first ever Burns Supper was held in July 1801 when nine of Burns' close friends gathered to mark the fifth anniversary of the poet's death. The evening took place at Burns Cottage in Alloway and included a meal of Haggis, performances of his work and a speech to honour him. After the success of the first night, it was decided that the friends would hold a similar evening on his birthday (25th January), thus beginning the tradition that we still celebrate today. There are lots of Burns Suppers and events held all over the country on this date such as Burns & Beyond in Edinburgh, The Big Burns Supper in Dumfries and Burns Night at Glamis Castle.

10 reasons why Scotland is wonderful in winter

It may be cold outside, but there is something undeniably magical about Scotland in winter. Here are some top reasons for visiting Scotland at this time of year.

Text and images courtesy of Scotland.org

1-See Scotland at its most affordable

Visiting Scotland outside of the peak season most definitely has its perks.

Nightly rates for hotels, B&Bs and other accommodation providers can be prohibitively expensive, particularly during the summer months. Planning on renting a car for a week or booking an activity?

Soaring prices and limited availability can really stretch your budget or even cause you to miss out entirely. Save yourself some money by planning a visit this winter.

2-Escape the crowds

If you have always dreamt or wandering down the Royal Mile in Edinburgh, witnessing the legendary Fairy Pools on Skye, or capturing the evocative ruins of Doune Castle. Do yourself a favour and considering scheduling your visit to Scotland's most popular attractions during the winter months. You will have to deal with the shorter days and the greater likelihood of rain and inclement weather, but the chance to savour the country's most special places without jostling for space or having the experience marred by congested roads and endless queues is worth it.

3-Go walking in a winter wonderland

It's no secret that Scotland's iconic landscapes can be especially spectacular during the winter months. The low-hanging winter sun illuminates the Highlands and rugged coastline in an amber glow which is a joy to photograph. What's more, this highly Instagram-able 'golden hour' is extended at this time of year. You will also find that the dark-heavy clouds, moody light-effects, and even the rain renders mysterious locations like Loch Ness even more beautiful. Add a light dusting of frost and Scotland's landscapes positively sparkle.

4-Spectacular sunrises and sunsets

Scotland's northerly location produces some phenomenal sunrises and sunsets. To witness these during the summer months, you have to rise as early as 4am and stay up well into the evening to catch them. Not so in winter. Sleep in as late as 9am and you can watch the sky turn dramatic hues or orange, pink and red before watching the spectacle repeat itself when the sun goes down by 4pm. Juxtaposed again snow-blanketed mountains, frozen lochs and empty stretches of beach, dawn and dusk in Scotland at this time of year is truly special.

5-Winter festivals

Scots know how to keep themselves entertained at this cold time of year. It's no accident that many or our most celebrated events and traditions fall over the winter period. The season kicks off with St Andrew's Day on November 30 - our national day which honours our patron saint and unique cultural identity. Events and get-togethers are held across the whole country and may even extend into December. There are also a plethora of Christmas and festive markets to enjoy across all of Scotland's seven cities, and many of our towns and villages, throughout the advent season. Then, of course, there's Hogmanay - a unique Celtic tradition that marks the New Year.

6-Up Helly Aa

But perhaps out of all of Scotland's winter festivals, the most unique is Up Helly Aa, an annual fire festival held every winter across the Shetland Isles which harks back to the islands' distinct Viking heritage. The largest and most popular Up Helly Aa festival takes places in Shetland's capital of Lerwick on the last Tuesday on January every year. Watch as thousands of 'guizers' dressed up as Norsemen and all other kinds of fancy form a torch-lit procession down to the harbour. Here a beautiful purpose-built wooden long-ship is berthed before being torched by the revellers. As with Hogmanay, the party continues long into the night as everyone hops from bar to dancehall, to bar, then back again.

7-Burns Night

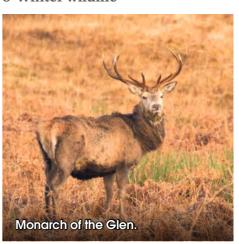

Finally, to mark the end of the winter festivals is Burn's Night on 25 January, the birthday of Scotland's national bard, Robert Burns, which celebrates his life and poems. The highlight of every Burn's Night event is his poem Address to a Haggis which is usually performed as the night's main course – haggis, neeps and tatties – is served for dinner.

8-Snowsports adventures

Whether you are a seasoned mountaineer or a complete newcomer to the world of snowsports, the Scottish Highlands are a great place to be of all kinds of outdoor adventures. From indoor ice-climbing at the Scottish Climbing Centre in Kinlochleven to hitting the slopes at ski resorts including Glencoe and Nevis Range by Fort William, or Glenshee and The Lecht in the Cairngorms, Scotland as plenty of options when it comes to making the most of the snowy conditions. Even if you aren't a skier or a snowboard, the view from the top of the mountains is something to savour.

9-Winter wildlife

The trees might be bare, but not all of Scotland's wildlife is deep in hibernation. The barren winter landscapes makes this one of the easiest times of year to catch of glimpse of rarely-seen creatures in Scotland's forests and wilderness areas including many species of deer, mountain hares, red squirrels and ptarmigans. Winter is also the season when vast numbers of geese travel to Scotland from their breeding grounds further up north - a prime sighting for keen birdwatchers.

10-Winter warmers

Scotland's cuisine is delicious yearround. But this is the perfect time of year to enjoy certain dishes. Creamy porridge, mouth-watering stews concocted from harvested vegetables and local game; nourishing soups like cullen skink and cock-a-leekie; delectable shortbread, cranachan and clootie dumpling; all washed down with a dram of the finest malt. It goes without saying that Scotland's foodie staples are best enjoyed during the winter season in front of a roaring fire.

Isle be loving Scotland

'isitScotland has run a poll to find out which Scottish islands people would most like to visit. The poll, run by the national tourism organisation to celebrate the 300th anniversary of the novel Robinson Crusoe, thought to be based on the life of Scottish castaway Alexander Selkirk, asked 1227 respondents from across the country to select the island or islands they wanted to visit most. The top three islands were the Isles of Skye, Arran and Harris, closely followed by the Orkney and Shetland Islands, as well as the Isle of Lewis. The Isles of Mull and Islay were also very popular and Bute, Barra, Iona and Tiree and Colonsay also made the top Scottish islands to visit.

Organised through ScotPulse, the first online research panel just for Scotland, the poll informed respondents about the 300th anniversary of Robinson Crusoe and its Scottish connections before asking them which of Scotland's islands they would most like to visit. Fieldwork took place in September and respondents were evenly distributed in age, gender and location.

Robinson Crusoe was written by Daniel Defoe and published in 1719. Often credited as marking the beginning of realistic fiction as a literary genre, it is a contender for the first English novel and is presented as an autobiography of the title character - a castaway who spends 28 years on a remote tropical desert island near Trinidad, encountering cannibals, captives, and mutineers, before ultimately being rescued.

The popularity of Scotland's islands It is widely considered to be inspired by the life of real-life castaway Alexander Selkirk who lived for four years on a Pacific island called "Más a Tierra", now part of Chile, which was renamed Robinson Crusoe Island in 1966. Selkirk was from Lower Largo in Fife and the town has a bronze statue and plaque in memory of him as well as a sign pointing to Robinson Crusoe Island.

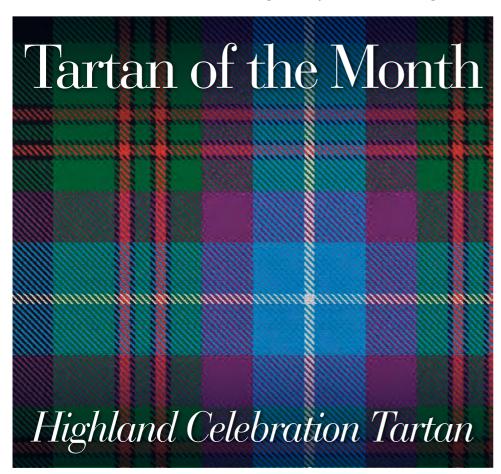

The timing of the poll is particularly apt as Scotland prepares to celebrate the Year of Coasts and Waters 2020, a yearlong programme of events and activities which will shine a spotlight on these vital elements of our landscape.

Chris Taylor, VisitScotland Regional Leadership Director, said: "As a country we are blessed with a vast number of fantastic islands, each with their own unique offering. The Shetland and Orkney Islands, Skye and the Outer Hebrides have all received coveted accolades this year, suggesting our islands are becoming an increasingly attractive proposition for visitors. This latest poll further highlights the popularity of Scotland's islands and I'm delighted to see such a range of islands from across the country voted for. At VisitScotland we have a marketing focus on sharing the tourism windfall in lesser known parts of the country outwith peak times to ensure that every part of the country enjoys the benefits it brings.'

World record set as whisky sells for £1.5 million rare bottle of Macallan 1926 60-year-old Scotch whisky has set a new world record after fetching £1.5 million at auction. The 60-year-old Macallan, described as the "holy grail" of whisky, from cask #263 was the headline sale of the Ultimate Whisky Collection auction, which was held by Sotheby's in London. More than 460 bottles have gone on sale during the auction, including 178 bottlings from The Macallan Fine & Rare series. The Macallan Fine & Rare 60 Year Old 1926 bottle (42.6% ABV) was offered for auction by a private American collector and had been estimated to sell for £350,000-£450,000 - less than a third of the final auction price. The 60-year-old bottle is the first to appear from the Fine and Rare series in more than a decade. It breaks the previous world record for the most expensive whisky set by the only bottle of the 1926 Macallan featuring a hand-painted design by Irish artist Michael Dillon. The bottle went under the hammer at Christie's in London and sold for £1.2m at auction.

The Scottish Banner is pleased to be offering the Tartan of the Month series highlighting a variety of different, unique and colourful tartans from around the world which are registered with the Scottish Register of Tartans in Edinburgh. The Scottish Register of Tartans was established by an act of the Scottish Parliament in November 2008 and promotes and preserves information about historic and contemporary tartans from Scotland and throughout the world. Text and image use is courtesy of the Scottish Register of Tartans (SRT).

nspired by the clan tartans, this tartan (SRT ref: 12553) celebrates the Highlands and the colours found there. The design is inspired in part by the landscape of the Highlands and in part by the history, with elements of some traditional clan tartans and a nod to the events of the Jacobite uprising. This tartan was designed by Ruth Black who is based in the Highlands and was registered in July, 2019.

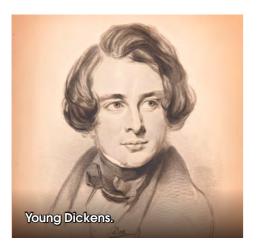

As the holiday season approaches one of the worlds most famous holiday productions, A Christmas Carol, will be played across the world on stages and televisions. Some may be surprised to learn the inspiration for the Charles Dickens classic character Ebenezer Scrooge came from a Scot who was buried in Edinburgh, as Judy Vickers explains.

is visit to Edinburgh in 1841 was a whirl of activity; the young Charles Dickens, not yet 30 but already the acclaimed author of soon-to-be classics such as Oliver Twist and Nicholas Nickleby, was feted at parties, given the freedom of the city and applauded for a literary lecture.

But somewhere in between meeting Edinburgh's glitterati and being mobbed by an adoring public during his 12-day stay, the author managed to fit in a stroll through Canongate Kirkyard. And here he came across something which proved rather more valuable than any of the dinners given in his honour by lords and ladies – it was the inspiration for one of his most famous characters. He came across a tombstone engraved "Ebenezer Lennox Scroggie - a meal man" and misread it as "mean man", an epitaph that haunted him. He wrote in his notebook: "I thought it was a grievous message for Eternity. The Scots are famous for frugality but mean man was an advertisement of a shrivelled soul... this was the emblem of a life surely wasted."

A Christmas Carol

But it was the shrivelled soul of the slightly renamed Scrooge which captured the public's imagination when A Christmas Carol was published two years later.

The story of Ebenezer Scrooge and his miserly ways, and his visits one Christmas Eve from four ghosts – that of his former business partner and of the Ghosts of Christmas Past, Present and Yet To Come – who teach him to change his ways is famous around the globe. And it is in a graveyard, confronted with the neglected tomb bearing his own name, that Scrooge repents his past and promises he is not the man he was.

But Dickens' misreading of meal man – meaning corn merchant – for mean man has had the consequence that the real Ebenezer Scroggie has now gone down in history as the inspiration for the world's most miserly man. "By all accounts, Scroggie was a really jovial, happy generous sort of guy, someone who doesn't really deserve to be associated with the Ebenezer Scrooge we know," says Tony Cownie, the writer and director of An Edinburgh Christmas Carol, this year's festive production at the Royal Lyceum Theatre in the Scottish capital, which sets the story back in the city which inspired it.

Scroggie, a cousin of the economist Adam Smith, was born in Kirkcaldy in 1792 – the name comes from a village in Perthshire. A merchant dealing in wine, whisky and corn, Scroggie secured the first contract to supply whisky to the Royal Navy offices at Leith, and even became the chief beverages supplier for King George IV's visit to the Capital in 1822, providing bottles of "Scroggie's Highland Brandie". He lived in the Grassmarket and was well-known for throwing parties – legend has it that he goosed the Countess of Mansfield at a General Assembly of the Church of Scotland and that he got a maidservant pregnant.

He died in 1836 and was buried in the Kirkyard's cemetery - metres away from his famous cousin Adam Smith and just five years before Dickens' stroll. The grave itself was lost in 1932 in redevelopment work.

Moved by this trip to Edinburgh

As for Dickens, he was greatly moved by this trip to Edinburgh and his subsequent journey to the Highlands. He was travelling with his wife Catherine, whose father George Hogarth was born and brought up in the city. Hogarth, who had trained as a lawyer in Edinburgh with clients including Sir Walter Scott, gave Dickens his first break, inviting him to contribute more of his "street sketches" to the publication he edited, the Evening Chronicle in London. The series would eventually be collected as his first work, Sketches By Boz, in 1836. Hogarth's wife, Georgina, was the daughter of George Thomson, the publisher and friend of Burns. No doubt his fatherin-law's Edinburgh illustrious connections, as well as Dickens' own reputation, helped to make his Edinburgh trip such a whirl of social engagements; his itinerary includes dinners with the judge and literary critic Lord Francis Jeffrey, the painter William Allen and publishers Alexander and Robert Blackwood.

He was presented with the freedom of the city and given a scroll, which he kept in his study for the rest of his life. Crowds gathered wherever he went - he wrote the day after arriving at the city: "The hotel is perfectly besieged, and I have been forced to take refuge in a sequestered apartment at the end of a long passage." When he and Catherine took a trip to the Adelphi Theatre, the orchestra burst into a chorus of Charlie is My Darling. He gave a speech to the crowds which were gathering wherever he went, saying: "I believe I shall never hear the name of the capital of Scotland without a thrill of gratitude and pleasure. I shall love, while I have life, her people, her hills, and her houses, even the very stones of her streets."

Iconic tales

But the fact that he also made time for dinner with Dr William Alison, a medical professor at Edinburgh University and social reformer, which may give a clue to why Dickens was strolling in the Canongate in the first place. Alison was a campaigner for the relief of poverty, believing that overcrowding and insanitary conditions were leading to the spread of disease. Poverty - and the plight of the poor - was a passion of Dickens, a reflection of his own deprived childhood and reflected in the themes and characters of his books. The Royal Mile at the time of his 1841 visit was in a sorry state; with the building of the New Town, between the 1760s and 1830s, its wealthier citizens had decamped to the stylish streets across the valley from the drained Nor Loch. The High Street, and more latterly the Canongate, had gone into a decline and were rapidly becoming slums.

Dickens describes a trip to the Old Town in which he saw "more poverty and sickness in an hour than people would believe in, in a life" and talks of seeing in a slum tenement "a little, feeble, wan sick child. With his little wasted face, and his bright attentive eyes, I can see him now, as I have seen him for several years, looking steadily at us." One of his most impassioned speeches, fundraising for The Great Ormond Street Hospital for Sick Children in London, specifically recalls the miserable sights he saw in Edinburgh.

Dickens and his wife left Edinburgh on July 4, heading to Callander via Stirling, walking by Loch Katrine in the evenings, then on to Lochearnhead, where Dickens continued to work on his next novel Barnaby Rudge, before taking in Glencoe which he described as "perfectly horrific". Then it was back to London. And while this wasn't his last trip to Scotland - he was back in Edinburgh in 1847, when he said he was "sorry to report the Scott Monument a failure" – it was his monthlong summer stay in 1841 which has given Christmas one of its most iconic tales.

KINGS CASTLES AND

Australian Jim Stoddart was born in a Glasgow Tenement and raised in a Glasgow Housing Scheme 1943-1965. Jim will be taking readers on a trip down memory lane, of a time and place that will never be the same again, and hopes even if only a "DURTY" WEE RASCALS few people in the Scot's Diaspora have a dormant folk memory awakened, then he shall be more than delighted.

The Lorne Cinema

Born in a tenement in Gorbals Cross, Of a' the teddy boys, he wis the boss, He had a razor six feet wide, Killed a' the folk and threw them in the Clyde.

'y Aunt Peggy worked in the ticket office at the Lorne Cinema and my cousin, June, was the girl who sold the ice creams and drinks. They had got me a job there as an usher or 'chucker oot' as the locals would have said. My aunt and my cousin worked at the Lorne Cinema in Kinning Park, part-time, and over and above their day-time jobs. It gave them the extra income to go on continental holidays each year at a time when most Glaswegians were still heading off to Saltcoats and other Clyde Coast resorts for their summertime respites. The Fair Fortnight stemming back to medieval times was Glasgow's traditional holiday time when most of its heavy industry closed down completely and the city took a deep breath of fresh seaside air.

I had already been the beneficiary of the castanets, bull horns, pennants, flags and other souvenir items from Majorca, Spain, Portugal and Yugoslavia over the years from these more exotic Fair Fortnight excursions of my aunt and cousin.

The Lorne

I was now in uniform, chocolate brown with brass buttons, gold piping and nice big epaulettes. The other staff consisted of the manager, an alcoholic who we rarely saw, the projectionist who we never saw, and the head usher or gaffer, Alec, who did all the locking up but who otherwise kept well out of the way. There was a young woman usherette up in the balcony among the nice people who had paid extra. We never saw much of her either. John was the other usher and he and I were on together at the weekends, on busy nights and we both worked some nights the rest of the time on our own in the stalls. We were the people who led people to their seats with our torches and politely asked youths to take their feet off the backs of the seats and tone things down when they were getting boisterous.

They got me the job at the Lorne when I was seventeen and still at school. I worked a shift of four nights a week at the cinema and had to juggle this with my homework and study commitments, as well as being able to spend time with my girlfriend, Jean. She often came over to the cinema by bus and met me at closing time and then I saw her back home to Pollok on the bus. On the quiet nights I could park myself in front of a pillar and even watch most of the picture and talk to her, occasionally guiding a patron or two to their seats with my torch. At the busy times it could get quite boisterous at the Lorne. There were the Saturday afternoon matinees and lost kids to attend to and on Friday and Saturday nights the local hooligans to cope with.

The gaffer, Alec, required John, the other usher and me to constantly monitor whether people were putting their feet up onto the backs of the seats, although that was about the least of our worries. This often caused a bit of an altercation with rowdy and un-co-operative patrons, but then Alec, 'the heid yin' would be nowhere to be seen. He was always out of sight, busying himself somewhere else at the first sign of trouble. John was a good person to have around, a pleasant bloke but a bit of a Glasgow hard man. He worked at a brewery during the day and had ready access to some strange alcoholic concoctions. He often had a half bottle of near enough 100+ proof spirit secreted in the inside pocket of his usher's uniform and was not always fighting fit by the end of the evening.

Scots wa hae Wi' Wallace bled I dreaded some of the so-called popular films for they would run for six or seven nights instead of the usual three or four. I saw April Love and heard Pat Boone sing the title song enough times to last me a lifetime. That made me finally move on to other things, but not before I had witnessed a touching end to a night at the pictures by the people of Govan, the place of my birth. It was customary for all performances at cinemas and theatres to end with the playing of the British National Anthem and everyone, including me, dutifully stood to attention until the end of God Save the Queen, before moving off to the exits and our homes.

I was working my shift as usual on what was the evening of St Andrews Day, the 30th November 1960. However, when the anthem started up that evening, a small group of patrons burst out into singing Scots wa hae Wi'Wallace bled, which together with Scotland the Brave had over time become our country's unofficial anthems. Quite spontaneously everyone else in the cinema joined in and 'gave it laldy'. As the scratchy recording and refrain of God Save the Queen died away Scots Wa Hae continued with vigour. I walked to my bus that night with a new spring in my step, inspired by this simple, peaceful act of protest against an anthem that often had little emotional affect upon Scottish citizens. That would have been especially pertinent if they had known the other verses of the song as first performed on 28th September 1745, in the theatre in Dury Lane in London which included;

"Lord grant that Marshal Wade, may by thy mighty aid, Victory bring. May he sedition hush, and like a torrent rush, Rebellious Scots to crush. God save the King."

dinburgh's Christmas 2019, the hugely popular, world-renowned celebrations which last year welcomed almost 1 million unique visitors is again ready to welcome to the world to the Scottish capital this month. This year's offer promises another spectacular festive season for people of all ages to enjoy.

Brand new this season is Community Christmas, a wonderful, free, fun celebration which brings local Edinburgh communities together to spread festive cheer across the whole city. Community Christmas sees 12 locally significant buildings, across all four of Edinburgh's localities, come alive with festive projections over 12 consecutive nights, a new building every night. Each event also features a different local choir performing some of the best-loved festive tunes alongside the projection. The locations are: Abbeyhill Primary School, Sandy's

Community Centre in Craigmillar, Drumbrae Library and Community Hub, Corstorphine Community Centre, Gilmerton Community Centre, Pentland Community Centre - Oxgangs, Westside Plaza – Wester Hailes, Granton Primary School, Inch Community Education Centre, The Crags Centre by Holyrood Park, Craigentinny Community Centre and Broomhouse Community Hub.

Christmas markets

Also new to Edinburgh's Christmas this year and returning after its sell out success at the Edinburgh International Festival 2019, Canadian artists Janet Cardiff and George Bures Miller present Night Walk for Edinburgh, an intimate, one-on-one video experience taking audiences on a specially curated tour of Edinburgh's Old Town at twilight. This unique opportunity allows participants to discover a new Edinburgh where history and memory collide and where our perceptions of what is real are challenged. Featuring a three-dimensional soundscape, Night Walk engages all senses as audiences are led through the capital by Janet Cardiff's voice, discovering the city past and present.

Once again East Princes Street Gardens hosts one of the UK's most stunning Christmas Markets, offering a range of craft and food and drink stalls as well as rides and attractions, all against the backdrop of the iconic Edinburgh Castle. The Market's rides include, among others, the famous 60m high Star Flyer with spectacular 360° views of the city centre, equally not-forthe-faint-hearted Forth 1 Big Wheel, the most Instagrammable Christmas spot in Edinburgh the Christmas Tree Maze, fairground staple - Helter Skelter and, for the keen little travellers, Santa Train.

Castle Street once again becomes Santa's Edinburgh base this Christmas with his Grotto welcoming naughty and nice children every day until Christmas Eve. 24 Doors of Advent returns to offer a peek behind the scenes of some of Edinburgh's key institutions and venues, including the home to Scottish rugby, BT Murrayfield Stadium, The Sir Arthur Conan Doyle Centre, a centre for spiritual and mental wellness named in honour of the famous writer who spent many years studying spiritualism and the iconic Robin Chapel with its stunning stained-glass windows. The Nativity Scene moves this year to the Mound beneath the Christmas Tree donated by the Hordaland County Council in Norway. The Nativity Carol Concert, organised in conjunction with Edinburgh Churches Together, takes place at 3pm on 1 December on Mound Place.

One of the best Christmas celebrations in Europe

Charlie Wood and Ed Bartlam, producers of Edinburgh's Christmas said: "We're delighted to be returning with our seventh season of Edinburgh's Christmas. The nearly 300,000 unique visitors from Edinburgh and the Lothians in 2018 show what a popular local event it is but it's also the time of year when the city welcomes in hundreds of thousands of visitors and, once again, we're able to provide them with one of the best Christmas celebrations in Europe. We're particularly excited to be able to introduce Community Christmas to twelve different locations across Edinburgh bringing communities together locally to celebrate Christmas and also to officially start the celebrations on the Royal Mile with Light Night and a very special appearance from Santa Claus. Merry Christmas!"

Edinburgh's Lord Provost, Frank Ross, said: "There is simply no better place to celebrate Christmas than Scotland's Capital. This winter will see Edinburgh's Christmas cheer spread even further across the city. The Festival is a chance for us to celebrate our local talent and creativity and I'm looking forward to the launch of our city's Christmas with Light Night providing a stage for so many local performers. Alongside this, budding young artists will have the chance to showcase their work with Winter Windows, the Christmas markets will be awash with Scottish produce, and this year we will have sensory backpacks available free of charge to make the visit to the festival more accessible for people with autism or who have difficulty processing sensory information."

Edinburgh's Christmas takes place until 4 January 2020. For details see: www.edinburghschristmas.co.uk

Lady MacGregor's Scotland

By: Lady Fiona MacGregor

Lady MacGregor of MacGregor - otherwise known as British writer and broadcaster Fiona Armstrong - works for ITV news and current affairs. Fiona's husband is the Chief of Clan Gregor, Sir Malcolm MacGregor of MacGregor. She is an active member of Clan Armstrong, so their lives are interwoven with all things tartan. The couple live in the Scottish Borderlands, although filming and writing takes Fiona all over Scotland.

reetings from a frosty Scotland where the chief and I have been hibernating; wrapping up warm and hugging the fire. With no rush to brave the great outdoors, we are head down in books.

And why not?! Scotland is a nation of readers. This is the land of Robert Burns and Walter Scott. It is the birthplace of Arthur Conan Doyle who gave us Sherlock Holmes. And J.M Barry who invented Peter Pan.

Our house is full of books and where we live, we are not that far from Scotland's national book town. Wigtown is about an hour and a half away. It sits on the Galloway coast - and this year this literary centre has come of age.

21 years ago, Wigtown was a run-down place. Over the years the tourists and the curious came to this scholarly part of Scotland and the place has now been invigorated by reading and writing.

Books are big business in Scotland. In fact, the country has more than fifty literary festivals and I am just back from one of my favourites. 'Bookmark' at Blairgowrie in Perthshire is a fairly new event but it is going from strength to strength. Attracting famous authors and thousands of keen readers.

This time I am not just there to sit in the audience and hear a talk. This time, I am singing for my supper. I am interviewing two women, one who's produced a book on wool, the other on cotton and silk.

Tapestry

On the face of it, knitting and sewing might not sound that exciting. But what fascinating stories these ladies have unearthed!

Clare Hunter comes from Glasgow and her work, Threads of Life, is a history of the world through the eye of a needle. It tells how folk have used the language of sewing to make their voices heard over the centuries. From ancient tapestries clothes, to embroidered banners on the battlefield, to silken cushions in our sitting rooms.

Esther Rutter, meanwhile, is the wool lady. She comes from Fife and her book is a gold mine of facts. This Golden Fleece tells how knitting has not just been for grannies. There were the gnarled fishermen that sat on the quayside, fashioning their gansies. There were the prisoners of war who knitted to keep up spirits.

Indeed, the most unlikely people could be found click-clacking with their needles. Among them, members of the racy, literary London Bloomsbury set.

It is good to know that the old skills are still alive. Pastimes that might once have been seen as square and now considered stress busters. For my part, I am not averse to a bit of tapestry work. In fact, I can confess to creating a fair few cushions in my time.

And now, as 24th Chief of Clan Gregor, my husband's image must join the tartan hall of fame.

I have stitched flowers, birds and animals. This work has been carried out on trains and in cafes. It has been done in kitchens and doctor's waiting rooms. That stubby needle laboriously going in and out.

Now, 'look after the pennies and the pounds will look after themselves' is the saying. And that is certainly true for a little school I visit this month. For six decades youngsters at Lochmaben Primary in southwest Scotland have been putting money into a charity box. The scheme was started in 1959 by the then headmaster and each week every pupil and member of staff has put in a penny.

The money raised was given to the 'Save the Children'. And now to mark sixty years of collecting for the charity, the pupils hold a concert. These Scottish youngsters recite poetry and sing songs from far-off lands. And they have reason to celebrate. Over the years they have raised a staggering forty thousand pounds to help children in other parts of the world. It is some achievement.

Tartan hall of fame

Back at home, meanwhile, we are having an interesting time because the MacGregor chief is being captured on canvas. His ancestors were all painted, and their likenesses hang in the hall. And now, as 24th Chief of Clan Gregor, my husband's image must join the tartan hall of fame.

This masterpiece is being created in the dining room. The table pushed back, and dust sheets spread on surfaces. For it is possible that the artist may flick the odd spot of oil paint as he works.

We are lucky to get him. For he is a sought-after Scottish portrait painter. Ewan McLure hails from Aberdeen. Look him up on the internet and you will see his work.

Being painted is not a job for the fainthearted. The sitter must stay still for hours whilst the artist creates. It can take four days to complete. So, stamina is a must.

Every now and then, the chief is allowed to leave the room to grab a coffee and stretch his limbs. It is my turn next. So, watch this space. When both paintings are finished, you may get a sneak preview...

Be together at Edinburgh's Hogmanay programme announced with warm invitation to friends old and new to come together to celebrate in the home of Hogmanay.

The home of Hogmanay

the rest of the world as the international spotlight shines on Scotland's capital.

Marking the 27th edition of the world's best New Year Party, the three-day festival combines much loved Scottish traditions with the very best contemporary artists and acts from across the world in Edinburgh, the home of Hogmanay. Celebrations are officially ignited on the 30th December with the iconic Torchlight Procession in partnership with VisitScotland, the family friendly event which sees a cast of thousands joined by pipers, drummers and fire performers to forge a river of light through Edinburgh's historic heart, culminating in Holyrood Park. Following recent tradition, torchbearers will collectively gather in formation in Holyrood Park to create the outline of a hugely symbolic image of two people joining hands, captured from the air and beamed across the world. There is also a platform for local bands to entertain the crowds in Holyrood Park, culminating in a stunning fireworks display.

Edinburgh's world-famous Street Party features a non-stop six-hour party as Princes Street is transformed and animated by a host of international, UK and Scottish artists. Collaboration and artistic exchange remain at the heart of the festival as Scottish companies work alongside European acts to create bold new performances.

As New Year's Day dawns, and Scotland's celebratory Year of Coasts and Waters 2020 begins, what better way to clear any foggy heads from the night before than with a swift dip in the Firth of Forth?! The much loved, long held traditional Loony Dook returns to the beautiful shores of South Queensferry which sees thousands of brave souls decked out in the finest fancy dress take the plunge into the icy waters to welcome in the New Year, raising thousands of pounds for a range of charities in the process.

The biggest and best Street Party in the world

As dusk falls on January 1st Message from the Skies returns to illuminate Edinburgh's buildings, streets and monuments until Burns Night on the 25thJanuary 2020, this year taking inspiration from Scotland's coasts and waters and looking at the central role they've had and continue to have in moulding Scottish identity. Marking the beginning of Scotland's Year of Coasts and Waters, Message from the Skies 2020 sees five Scottish authors: Charlotte Runcie, Irvine Welsh, Kathleen Jamie, Kayus Bankole and Robin Robertson pen a love letter to Scotland, exploring how we regard ourselves as a coastal nation while considering how the world sees us. The letter will be a living letter, animated and brought to life through a set of new and unique collaborations with composers, visual artists and artists working to realise the letters in live animation which will then be projected across the city.

Edinburgh is the world's festival city with internationally renowned festivals year-round and Edinburgh's Hogmanay kicks them off at the beginning of every year.

Councillor Donald Wilson, Culture and Communities Convener for the City of Edinburgh Council, said: "Edinburgh's Hogmanay truly remains the place to be to ring in the new year and this year's exciting programme is no exception. An internationally-acclaimed event, Hogmanay draws crowds from across the world but also remains uniquely ours.

It brings new entertainment and attractions but also continues to honour our longheld traditions. So, whether you join the Torchlight Procession, spend your midnight moment as part of the biggest and best Street Party in the world or if you begin the next decade with a brave Loony Dook. Make sure to be here, be part of it and be together."

This month see's the eyes of the world looking out for reindeer to deliver the magic of the holiday's for millions of children. For nearly 70 years the beautiful Cairngorms have been home to Britain's only free ranging herd of reindeer. The team who mange the Cairngorm Reindeer Herd took the time to answer some questions about how the herd found their home in the Highlands, have thrived there and how they help bring Christmas joy to people across the UK.

The Cairngorm Reindeer Herd is Britain's only free-ranging herd of reindeer found in the Cairngorm mountains in Scotland. And whilst it is believed the Vikings hunted reindeer how did they get reintroduced to Scotland?

Our herd were reintroduced in 1952 by a Sami reindeer herder, Mikel Utsi, and his wife Ethel Lindgren. From the original eight reindeer, with a few more imports over the years to keep the bloodlines varied, the herd has grown to around 150. We maintain the number at this by managing the breeding - none of our reindeer are sold or used for meat.

The Cairngorm National Park is in one of the most beautiful parts of Scotland. It is also UK's largest National Park and a thriving habitat for reindeer. Can you tell us why the park is so perfect for the reindeer?

The Cairngorms offer the only sub-arctic eco-system left in the UK. This habitat offers a cooler climate and ideal food plants for the reindeer, including ample lichen which is essential for them in winter.

There is also a vast area of wild mountainous land for the reindeer to roam free on in their natural habitat - meeting all of their needs.

Training for the reindeer to pull a sleigh can start from when they are five months old, takes three years and involves them being castrated. Can you tell us more?

Just like socialising a puppy, it is essential that reindeer are exposed to different sights and sounds from a young age, so they don't become worried by any situation. As a herd animal, they learn best from other reindeer, so all our handling is done alongside older animals, who lead by example.

There is also plenty of tasty food involved as bribery! The calves are trained to walk on a headcollar at five months old, join the big boys at Christmas events, and then are introduced to wearing a simple harness. By the time they first pull a sleigh, alongside an experienced reindeer, at three years old, they rarely bat an eyelid and tend to act as if they've done it all their life. We castrate most of our male reindeer when they are fully grown at three years old as this helps prevent inbreeding and training them to harness gives them an ongoing purpose in life!

This month is no doubt a very busy one for the herd with Christmas fast approaching. How does the herd help people across the UK celebrate the festive season?

Our docile mature male castrated reindeer are trained to pull the sleigh and head out in teams of six on short trips to meet the public across the UK. They are well-socialised from a young age and as a domesticated animal take it all in their stride. There is a common misconception that reindeer are 'wild' but in fact they have been domesticated for thousands of years, like dogs and horses, so are used to working alongside people.

Many kids will leave a carrot or cookie out for Santa and his reindeer on Christmas. Can you tell us what reindeer most enjoy feeding on?

The favourite food of the reindeer is actually lichen, which grows high on the mountains on the ground among the heather. It's not the most nutritious of feed but contains enough goodness to help the reindeer through the winter when other food is scarce. They also enjoy a special cereal mix that we give them as a supplementary feed, a bit like your porridge. The only time reindeer are allowed carrots is on Christmas eve, as they help them to see when flying in the dark!

Some may be surprised to learn that reindeer are the only species of deer in which both the males and the females grow antlers. Why do antlers fall off the reindeer each year?

There are a couple of reasons. Antlers are made of solid bone, so once they have hardened at the end of the summer, they cannot grow any more.

Therefore, in order to grow a bigger, better set the next year, the reindeer must cast them and start afresh. The other reason is that carrying the extra weight of antlers (up to 12kg for the bulls) through the heavy winter snows seriously compromises their chances of survival. The bulls only need them for dominance during the autumn rut, then cast them immediately after, usually before Christmas (which says something about Rudolph!). The females hold their (much smaller) antlers longer which means they are in charge in winter, when they are pregnant and most in need of the food.

The herd has grown quite a bit since the 1950s to over 150 today. What, either positive or negative, impacts to the local environment do you need to keep an eye on?

Whilst reindeer are a native species here in the Highlands and are comparatively light on the ground, we are still careful to ensure our numbers don't grow to a point where they impact the grazing. We have held the number at around 150 for the last twenty or so years, which keeps grazing pressure low whilst giving us enough genetic diversity to prevent inbreeding. We also limit the numbers as every reindeer has a name and there is a limit to how many we can remember!

Reindeer of course are very much a part of Highland culture and are more than just for Christmas. How can visitors to Aviemore interact with the herd when in Scotland throughout the year?

We have the Reindeer Centre open in Glenmore from February to Hogmanay, with daily guided trips to see the herd on the hillside. This is the perfect way for people to meet and learn about reindeer in their natural habitat and experience the conditions that they are so well adapted to firsthand. The reindeer are incredibly friendly and delighted to come and eat out of visitors' hands. We also have a small group of reindeer in the Paddocks at the Centre from Easter to Hogmanay, which allows those unable to make the walk onto the hillside to still see some of our beautiful animals.

The Cairngorm Reindeer Herd are in Aviemore in the Highlands of Scotland. For details see: www.cairngormreindeer.co.uk

IN SCOTLAND TODAY

Aberdeen, Edinburgh and Inverness ranked among top 10 cities to live and work in UK

Inverness, Edinburgh and Aberdeen are ranked top in Scotland, and among the top 10 locations overall in league tables of the best cities to live and work in the UK. The latest Demos-PwC Good Growth for Cities Index shows Aberdeen leapfrogging Edinburgh(7th position) into sixth spot in the UK. A separate index covering just Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland puts Inverness in pole position, ahead of other Scottish and UK cities, including Aberdeen, thanks to its quality of life. PwC says the two indices have been calculated differently so it is not possible to directly compare them. The UK-wide index covers 42 cities and is based on 11 indicators of socio-economic growth. These include employment, health, income and skills, while housing affordability, commuting times, environmental factors and income inequality are also included, as is the number of new business startups. Oxford retained its place as the top ranked city in the UK this year, followed by Reading and Southampton. Bristol and Milton Keynes round off the top five.

Archaeologists put face to 600 year-old medieval man

The face of a medieval man whose remains were found during Aberdeen Art Gallery's redevelopment has been revealed to the world for the first time in at least 600 years thanks to amazing facial reconstruction technology. The man, known only as Skeleton 125 (SK125) was among 60 entire skeletons and 4272 human bone fragments from at least 381 individuals discovered on the site of the Art Gallery shortly after the redevelopment work began in 2015. The discovery resulted in construction work being suspended to allow for archaeological investigations.

Following extensive post-excavation research, AOC Archaeology Group have reconstructed SK125 and concluded that he was a mature adult male over 46 years old. At between 159 and 166cm tall (5'2"-5'5"), he was shorter than the average male for the later medieval period. He suffered from extensive dental disease, including tooth loss, periodontal disease, cavities and a chronic abscess.

Dr Paula Milburn of AOC
Archaeology Group explained: "SK 125 has provided us with a first fascinating glimpse of one of the people buried on the site of Aberdeen Art Gallery over 600 years ago. The on-going post-excavation work is examining the remains in detail and will provide us with amazing information on the kind of people buried here, including their ages, gender, health and lifestyles."

Dr Milburn added that the man displayed the effects of age, with degenerative joint disease observed in the middle and lower back. Research also indicated that, while many individuals buried at the site display 'local' values – consistent with growing up on soils local to Aberdeen – he was not local to Aberdeen but perhaps spent his childhood in an area such as the north-west Highlands or Outer Hebrides. Fascinatingly, sulphur isotope data – which can reveal residence later in life – indicates that he may have spent the last years of his life in or around Aberdeen."

The Art Gallery was built in 1885 on the site of the former Blackfriars Dominican Friary, believed to have been founded between AD1222–1249. The friary and its church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, were destroyed by reformers in AD1560.

Excavations outside the Gallery uncovered a red brick charnel house containing three Victorian coffins, holding a mass of disarticulated human remains. Inside the Gallery excavations revealed in situ burials including the 60 skeletons and the remainder of the human bones. SK125 was recovered from the lowest level of the burials, with other skeletons dated to the period 1050 to 1410. Of the 60 skeletons, 56 were adults (18+ years), one an adolescent (13 years) and three were children of six, eight and 11 years of age. Of the adult skeletons, 26 were male and six were female, and they ranged in age from 18 to 25 through to 46 years and older. The remains provided evidence of a strenuous, physically active lifestyle with high rates of dental disease.

Bank of Scotland unveils two new £20 polymer note designs

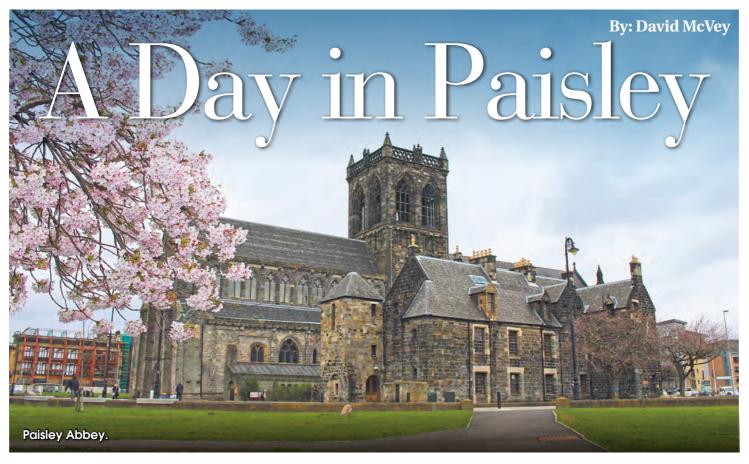

The Bank of Scotland has unveiled the design of its new Polymer £20 note which will enter circulation early in the new-year. The front of the note will continue to feature the portrait of the Scottish novelist and poet, Sir Walter Scott, alongside the image of The Mound in Edinburgh. The distinctive red Forth Bridge remains on the reverse which was listed as a World Heritage Site by UNESCO in July 2015. Holders of the new £20 polymer note will recognise a new image of the Forth Bridges, with the Queensferry Crossing visible in the background. In celebration of the longest three-tower, cable stayed bridge in the world, the Queensferry Crossing will be celebrated in its own right by featuring on a limited number of commemorative £20 notes. Sir Walter Scott will remain on the front of the note. Tara Foley, Managing Director Bank of Scotland, said: "Bank of Scotland has issued bank notes for more than 320 years, showcasing the country's proud history. The Queensferry Crossing is the perfect example of Scottish ingenuity and innovation, and that's why we have decided to commemorate the landmark site on a collection of our £20 Polymer notes." Like the £10 Polymer note, the £20 note will also introduce the tactile emboss feature to aid the visually impaired. All existing paper Bank of Scotland £20 notes will be gradually withdrawn following the issue of the new note, but any currently in circulation will continue to be accepted at shops, banks and cash payment machines.

Skye flag competition in launched

The search has begun for a flag design to represent the Isle of Skye. The competition is open to people of all ages from anywhere on the planet. The competition is being guided by the Court of the Lord Lyon - the ancient body responsible for the registration of all flags and Coats of Arms. The Honorary Vexillologist to the Court of the Lord Lyon, Philip Tibbetts has been on Skye visiting schools to encourage the pupils to enter the competition. The final flag design will be unveiled in March, after which it will become a freely useable symbol for all to display and associate with the Isle of Skye. Phillip Tibbets said the key to a successful flag design usually lies in its simplicity and symbolism. He advises entrants to use no more than three basic colours in coming up with a flag that should be bold, distinctive and meaningful. "The flag should be simple enough to draw it from memory, and it shouldn't include writing and other intricate detail which is difficult to see at a distance," he said. "But given Skye's iconic status, the potential for both the design and subsequent usage of a flag for the island is incredible. It's fantastic to see Skye become the latest community to start the journey of developing its own flag to fly proudly alongside the Saltire."

Situated 10 minutes from Glasgow, Paisley is Scotland's largest town with a rich history especially in textiles. Surrounded by rolling countryside, Paisley is home to a host of architectural treasures, hidden gems and a vibrant history as David McVey explains.

n the Middle Ages a monk crossed to Scotland from Ireland and built a church near the White Cart Water in modern Renfrewshire. He was later remembered as St Mirin or Mirren and the town that grew up around his church became Paisley.

Scotland's largest town

Paisley is now Scotland's largest town (anything that's bigger is a city) and is dominated by Paisley Abbey. The abbey dates from 1163, and was dedicated to no less than four saints, only one of whom had a connection with Paisley; St Mirin. The town's Roman Catholic cathedral also carries his name and so, of course, does the town's football club; if you take the train to watch St Mirren FC play, you alight at Paisley St James Station. Paisley is full of saints.

By 1830, much of Paisley Abbey was in ruins, but it has undergone several programmes of restoration since then. The oldest parts date from the 12th century, while the adjoining Place (i.e. 'palace') of Paisley is a monastic range of the 15th century. It was also restored during the 20th century and the Abbey café and shop are based there.

I've been to many places of Christian worship - for example, St Giles' in Edinburgh, Notre Dame in Paris, St Vitus in Prague - where the sheer volume of visitors, all merrily snapping selfies, detracts from the experience. Paisley Abbey is a happier place to visit; still a parish church, it's rarely overrun by tourists and you get a greater sense of what it's for. Inside you'll find the tomb of Robert III, a memorial window to William Wallace, the historic Barochan Cross, and a memorial tablet to John Witherspoon.

Witherspoon was a signatory to the American Declaration of Independence. A minister from East Lothian, he served in Paisley's Laigh Kirk; the building survives as the Paisley Arts Centre. He then moved to the USA where he became president of Princeton University. Witherspoon is well-remembered in Paisley. There's a street named after him and a statue, by Paisley sculptor Sandy Stoddart, stands outside the town's university.

The former Paisley College became the University of Paisley in 1992. I worked there for 14 happy years but, like many others, was saddened when it changed its name to the vague 'University of the West of Scotland'. It has a fine record of education and research, a proud reputation for attracting students from disadvantaged backgrounds - and Vanish stain remover was developed there!

Textile town

Paisley was a textile town, a weaving town, a thread town. It became a world centre of the trade in the 18th and 19th centuries and specialised in intricately patterned shawls modelled on those formerly imported from Kashmir. They cornered the market so well that these are now widely-known as paisley shawls displaying the paisley pattern.

The profits from Paisley's thread and textiles wealth were ploughed into many of the town's impressive buildings.

Paisley was a textile town, a weaving town, a thread town.

The Thomas Coats Memorial Baptist Church soars impressively across from the university; the Coats family were a renowned Paisley thread dynasty. Thomas Coats was a devout Baptist, but the building never sat well with a denomination that often favours modest simplicity. The congregation moved out in 2015 and the building is now being refurbished as an events venue.

Across the river, Dunn Square is laid out in Italianate style to match the Town Hall and features several statues, including a stern Queen Victoria, who looks nothing like Jenna Coleman. The square commemorates Sir William Dunn, who was Paisley's MP in the 1890s.

St Mirren FC used to play at a fine old stadium in Love Street, just north of Gilmour Street Station. On your way there from the town centre, you would pass the entrance to Fountain Gardens, a small formal park gifted to the town in 1868 by the Coats family (again). The centrepiece was the Grand Fountain, which was cast by the Glasgow's Sun Foundry.

We think of the Victorians as staid and humourless, a bit like the Queen Victoria statue in Dunn Square. But they created the Grand Fountain which is exuberant, colourful, exotic, funny and plain off-thewall, with its gilded herons and cherubs squirting jets of water from alligators they hold like machine-guns. And then there are the four life-size walruses cheerfully squirting water from their nostrils.

The Grand Fountain had been showing its age but is now beautifully restored to its original condition having been relaunched in the summer of 2014. I'd dare to call it one of Scotland's great man-made wonders and it really should be better known. You'll like it and it'll make you laugh. Not many fountains manage that.

Buddies

Paisley folk are known as 'Buddies', though no one is really sure why.
Buddies who have achieved fame include Doctor Who and Sherlock writer Steven Moffat, Scotland cricketer Majid Haq, Scotland footballers Davie Hay and Archie Gemmill, artists John Byrne and Sandy Stoddart and actors Tom Conti, Gerard Butler, David Tennant and Phyllis Logan. The town really punches above its weight in music; think of Kenneth McKellar, Carol Laula, Gerry Rafferty and Paulo Nutini.

The town is particularly proud of Rafferty, a singer-songwriter who had a real purple patch in the late 1970s and early 1980s and whose Baker Street is one of the most recognisable tracks in music. Sadly, he died in 2011 but his home town is very proud of him. There's now a street named Gerry Rafferty Drive and in Browns Lane, near the town centre, there's an impressive mural of Rafferty, based on the cover of his City to City album. The original cover was painted by Paisley artist John Byrne while Danny McDermott produced the mural.

There are several music-related pieces of street art around Brown's Lane (I'm not sure what links Jimi Hendrix and John Lennon have to Paisley...) but others address football; perhaps the most impressive celebrates St Mirren FC's Scottish Cup win in 1987.

Paisley has applied in the past to be granted city status, but I think it should instead make the most of being our largest town. Its history, its heritage and its people - Buddies - are hard to match in any city or town.

Over 120,000 people attend The Royal Edinburgh Military Tattoo in Sydney

he Royal Edinburgh Military Tattoo ended its 4-show run at Sydney's ANZ Stadium with over 120,000 people attending the historic production.

The major event featured a record-breaking 1521 cast making it the largest ever production in the Tattoo's 69-year history.

Culturally diverse production Australian Producer, Michael Cassel said "The four stadium shows are the culmination of three year's planning, and I couldn't be prouder of the stellar team that joined us to deliver these shows – representing a who's who of the world's best major event and ceremonies production teams. The performances, from our cast of 1521, were thrilling and the audience enjoyment palpable. I'm most grateful to our Producer and CEO of The Royal Edinburgh Military Tattoo, Brigadier David Allfrey MBE, for his creativity, trust and collaboration. It truly was an experience we will never forget".

Audiences were treated to a culturally diverse production with 33 musical, folkloric and military groups including 297 of the very best Pipers and Drummers, 630 Military performers, 42 Shetland Fiddlers, 102 Tattoo Dancers, 4 Indigenous Song Men and 195 Cultural Performers from Australia and abroad. The Sydney 2019 production had 14 nations represented including the UK, Switzerland, France, Tonga, Fiji, Cook Islands, New Zealand and Australia as well as, for the first time ever, acts from Indonesia, Papua New Guinea, Solomon Islands, Samoa and Vanuatu.

A worldwide phenomenon

This production boasted all the hallmark elements of the world-famous Scottish military and cultural event including traditional crowd favourite songs Auld Lang Syne and Scotland The Brave in addition to contemporary favourites, including a special performance by John Paul Young singing his much-loved classic, Love Is In The Air, joined by the entire cast of the Sydney 2019 Tattoo.

The Royal Edinburgh Military Tattoo was inspired by a simple show called Something About a Soldier performed in 1949 at the Ross Bandstand below Edinburgh Castle. 70 years on, the Tattoo has become a worldwide phenomenon, with a remarkable live audience of 220,000 at Edinburgh Castle each August and a global TV audience of 100 million that continues to captivate the hearts and minds across the globe. The word tattoo is derived from a Dutch word for the signal played on a drum or bugle to summon soldiers back to their barracks at night. The term evolved in the 18thcentury to mean a form of evening performances given by military bands.

Glasgow named in world's top five cities for sustainable tourism lasgow has been recognised as one of the world's top five cities for its commitment to sustainable business tourism. The Global Destination Sustainability Index (GDS-Index) published its 2019 ranking, with Scotland's largest city climbing three places from joint-seventh to fourth. It's a huge boost for Glasgow as the city prepares to host the United Nations' 26th Conference of the Parties Climate Change Conference (COP26) in 2020. Governments and destinations around the world are responding to the global climate emergency and Glasgow's ambitions include a pledge to become the UK's first carbon neutral city by 2030. The Scottish Government has set a net zero emissions target for Scotland by 2045. The GDS Index was launched in 2016 and promotes responsible business tourism best practice.

Compiled by global sustainability academics and policymakers, it ranks nearly 60 cities around the world based on four key criteria – environmental strategy and infrastructure; social sustainability performance; the strategy of the host city's Convention Bureau; and industry supply chain support (from the likes of convention centres, meetings venues, hotels, restaurants and transport operators). To date, Glasgow remains the only UK city to feature in the Index, which also includes Sydney, Barcelona and Kyoto.

Councillor David McDonald, Chair of Glasgow Life and Depute Leader of Glasgow City Council, said: "Glasgow's ambition is to be at the forefront on climate action and we are determined to become the UK's first carbon neutral city by 2030 and a worldleading centre for sustainable policy and innovation. Being named as one of the world's top five sustainable conference and business events destinations by the Global Destination Sustainability Index shows the great strides that we are making in that respect. Glasgow is home to some of the world's biggest energy companies and we're internationally recognised as having one of the healthiest and most diverse energy industries globally; particularly in terms of low carbon industries, which has had a hugely positive impact on the volume of conferences that we're attracting in these sectors."

Glasgow hosted 25 energy, sustainability and carbon reduction related conferences in the 2018/19 financial year, boosting the city's economy by nearly £8m.

IN THE SCOTTISH KITCHEN

Glazed Christmas ham

Ingredients

For cooking the gammon
2-4kg/4lb 8oz.-9lb unsmoked boneless gammon joint, tied 2 onions, halved
2 carrots, unpeeled, cut into 5cm/2in pieces
2 celery stalks, cut into 5cm/2in pieces
4 bay leaves
12 black peppercorns
small handful cloves
For the glaze
4 tbsp. runny honey

Method:

4 tbsp. English mustard

Place the gammon joint into a large lidded saucepan, cover with cold water and bring to the boil over a high heat. Drain the water from the saucepan, add fresh cold water, add the onions, carrots, celery, bay leaves and peppercorns and bring to the boil once more. Reduce the heat, cover with a lid and simmer the gammon and vegetables gently for 20 minutes per 500g/1lb 2oz. (If your pan is not quite large enough to cover the joint completely, turn the gammon over halfway through the cooking time.)

Remove the gammon from the water and set aside to cool for fifteen minutes. (The cooking liquid can be strained and reserved for making soup for another time.)

Pre-heat the oven to 200C/400F/ Gas 6 and line a large roasting tin with aluminium foil.

Use a small knife to remove the rind from the gammon joint, leaving as much of the fat intact as possible. Score the fat in a diamond pattern, and push a clove into the centre of each 'X'.

Place the gammon into the foillined roasting tray, ensuring that the sides of the foil come half way up the joint to contain any roasting juices.

For the glaze, mix the honey and mustard together and brush half of it evenly over the gammon, including one side of the joint. Roast in the centre of the oven for ten minutes, then take the joint out and brush the top and remaining side with the rest of the glaze. Return the gammon to the oven for a further 10-15 minutes, rotating the roasting tin so that the opposite side of the gammon faces the back of the oven.

The gammon is ready when the fat on top is glossy and golden brown. Cover loosely with foil if the top begins to look too brown. Remove the gammon from the oven and set aside to rest for 15 minutes before carving.

Pour any juices that have collected in the aluminium foil into a small pan, and warm through gently.

Carve the gammon, serve on a large platter and spoon over the warmed juices.

Christmas turkey

Ingredients:

20ml/3/4fl oz. rapeseed oil 1 x 5kg/11lb good-quality free-range turkey, preferably organically reared, wishbone removed (ask your butcher to remove the wings and neck and chop them into 2.5cm/1in pieces to use in the dish) 40g/11/20z unsalted butter, softened to room temperature 2 pinches sea salt flakes 2 pinches freshly ground white pepper 200ml/7fl oz. water salt and freshly ground black pepper 1-2 tsp ground arrowroot (depending on how thick you like your gravy), dissolved in 1 tbsp. cold water roast potatoes and steamed seasonal vegetables, to serve

Remove the turkey from the fridge and bring to room temperature this will take at least an hour.

When you are ready to cook, preheat the oven to 230C/220C fan/Gas 8.

Heat the rapeseed oil in a large, heavy-based roasting tray on the stove top. Add the chopped turkey wings and neck and fry for 8-10 minutes, turning the pieces over every 2-3 minutes, or until evenly browned all over.

Meanwhile, in a small bowl, soften the butter with the back of a dessert spoon, then season with the salt and freshly ground white pepper. Using a pastry brush or your hands, smear the seasoned butter all over the turkey. Add any remaining butter to the roasting tray once the chopped wings and neck have browned.

Place the turkey on top of the wing and neck pieces, then roast in the oven for 30 minutes.

Remove the turkey from the oven and baste all over with the cooking juices.

Reduce the oven temperature to 160C/150C fan/Gas 3.

Pour the water into the roasting tray, then return the turkey to the oven and continue to cook for a further 1 hour, basting the bird with the cooking juices every 20 minutes (do this quickly to prevent the heat escaping from the oven).

At the end of the cooking time, test that the turkey is cooked through by inserting a skewer or roasting fork into the thickest part of its thigh; if the juices run clear, the meat is cooked. Alternatively, use a meat thermometer; if cooked, the temperature should be 74°C or above. If the turkey is not fully cooked, return it to the oven for a further 20 minutes or until the juices run clear.

Remove the turkey from the oven and transfer the bird to a large, deep-sided tray, reserving the roasting tray the turkey was cooked in along with the cooking juices. Set the turkey aside to rest for a minimum of 30 minutes and up to $1\frac{1}{2}$ hours.

While the turkey is resting, cook your roast potatoes and vegetable dishes.

When you're almost ready to serve the meal, return the roasting tray used to cook the turkey to the stove top. Bring the cooking juices to the boil over a medium heat, scraping up any burned bits from the bottom of the tray using a wooden spoon.

Collect the juices released by the turkey as it was resting and add them to the gravy. Season, to taste, with salt and freshly ground black pepper, if needed.

Reduce the heat until the gravy is simmering, then stir in the dissolved arrowroot and cook until the gravy has thickened.

Strain the gravy through a fine sieve into a warmed jug. Keep warm.

To serve, bring the turkey to the table and carve into slices. Serve with the roast potatoes and vegetables. Pour over the gravy.

Brandy butter

Ingredients:

110g/4oz. unsalted butter, softened 85g/3oz. light muscovado sugar 85g/3oz. icing sugar, sieved 3 tbsp. brandy or cognac

Method:

Put the butter in a bowl. Beat well with a wooden spoon till soft or for speed use an electric hand whisk (and if you use a food processor then there is no need to sieve the icing sugar).

This month gather friends and family around and eat perhaps a bit more than you should, and celebrate Christmas and Hogmanay with a great range of food and drink. From our table to yours-Happy Holidays!

Beat in both the sugars till smooth, then add the brandy. If you are over generous with the brandy it will curdle so just beat in more sieved icing sugar and it will come smooth again.

Serve with the Christmas pudding or even as a addition to a mince pie.

Eggnog

Ingredients:

6 medium free-range eggs (preferably organic and as fresh as possible), separated 150g/5½ oz. golden caster sugar 500ml/18fl oz. whole milk 400ml/14fl oz. double cream 350ml/12fl oz. rum, bourbon or a mixture of the two, depending on your preference freshly grated nutmeg, to taste

Method:

Whisk the egg yolks in a bowl with $100 g/3 \frac{1}{2}$ oz. of the caster sugar until the mixture is pale yellow and thick (this is best done with an electric handheld mixer).

Stir in the milk, double cream, and the rum and/or bourbon.
You can add a little grated nutmeg as well, if you like your nog this way.

Pour the mixture into two 750ml/1½ pint bottles with stoppers and store in the fridge for up to two weeks. (The alcohol will prevent any spoilage of the eggs or cream.)

Place the egg whites in a box and freeze until ready to serve the egg nog.

When ready to serve, defrost the egg whites into a clean metal or glass bowl. Using a handheld electric mixer, whisk the egg whites until foamy and opaque. Add the remaining 50g of sugar and whisk the egg whites until soft peaks form when the whisk is removed.

Pour the egg nog from the bottles into a large bowl and fold in the egg whites until well combined.

Ladle the egg nog into glass tumblers and serve with a little freshly grated nutmeg over the top of each glass.

Tickets now on sale for 21st annual Pipes of Christmas

he Pipes of Christmas will celebrate its 21St season with performances in New Jersey and New York in December. The holiday favorite opens on Saturday, December 14 at Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, located at 921 Madison Avenue (at 73rd Street) for a 2PM performance. The concert moves across the Hudson River on Sunday, December 15 to Central Presbyterian Church located at 70 Maple Street in Summit, NJ with performances at 2 and 7PM.

Mystical nativity

For those weary of the ceaseless stream of secular seasonal music from department stores to TV, the Pipes of Christmas offers a spiritual and traditional take on the season that connects concertgoers to the holiday in a fresh, meaningful way. The show features tunes such as, Highland Cathedral, Joy to the World, and Amazing Grace, all performed live on pipes and drums, harp and fiddle, and organ and brass and more. Not only does the performance define Christmas cheer, but also it inspires those of Celtic descent to retrace and reconnect to their ancestry.

The 2019 production will also mark the world premiere of "Mystical Nativity," an original composition inspired by the 16th century masterpiece painted by Italian Renaissance master, Sandro Botticelli.

Robinson from the film Braveheart, New England fiddle champion Paul Woodiel, champion harpist Rachel Clemente, and the Pipe Major Kevin Ray Blandford Memorial Pipe Band from Redlands, California among many more.

Proceeds Support Scholarships and More
Proceeds from the concert support an extensive music scholarship program, which includes the Carol Hassert

Proceeds from the concert support an extensive music scholarship program, which includes the Carol Hassert Memorial Fine Arts Scholarship at Summit (NJ) High School as well as annual gifts to the National Piping Centre and the Royal Conservatoire of Scotland (both located in Glasgow, Scotland) the Gaelic College of Nova Scotia and Lyon College in Batesville, Arkansas.

The concert presents the music of Ireland, and Wales. Featured performers include singer Maddy Kearns of Glasgow,

Scotland making her concert debut, James from the Celtic literature of Scotland,

Christmas accompanied by readings taken

Proceeds also support the Society's sponsorship of the US National Scottish Harp Championship, the Gaelic Literature Competition at Scotland's Royal National Mod and an annual academic research prize at Sabhal Mòr Ostaig, Scotland's Gaelic college on the Isle of Skye.

Celtic spirit

Since making its debut in 1999,
The Pipes of Christmas has played to standing room only audiences.
Now a cherished holiday event, the concert provides audiences with a stirring and reverent celebration of the Christmas season and the Celtic spirit. Audience-goers return year after year to experience the program, many reporting that the Pipes of Christmas has become part of their family's annual Christmas tradition.

The concert has been lavished with critical acclaim. In his review for Classical New Jersey Magazine, Paul Somers wrote, "The whole evening was constructed to introduce gem after gem and still have a finale which raised the roof. In short, it was like a well-constructed fireworks show on the Glorious Fourth. The Westfield Leader described the concert as "a unique sound of power and glory nowhere else to be found."

Each year, concert highlights are webcast in hi-definition over the Christmas holiday to a global audience. In cooperation with HomeTowne Television, the 2018 production was the recipient of two prestigious Telly Awards for webcast excellence.

The concert is still accepting Title Sponsors as well as Program Ads. These gifts help offset production expenses and add help fund our scholarships.

Tickets may be purchased online exclusively through Brown Paper Tickets at www.brownpapertickets.com (be certain you select the event name and date in the search engine) or by phone at (800) 838-3006. Reserved patron seats are available at both venues.

Shetland named as one of the best cruise ship destinations in Europe hetland's tourism industry goes from strength to strength as it was announced that Lerwick has been recognised as one of the best destinations in Britain and Western Europe to visit by cruise ship. Lerwick came third in the list, with Kirkwall in Orkney ranking number one and Cork, Amsterdam and Bruges completing the top five.

The Cruisers' Choice Destination Awards is based on cruise ship passenger ratings posted on the Cruise Critic website, an online cruise guide, featuring more than 350,000 cruise reviews. "To be placed third in the category is another great accolade, bringing more international recognition that Lerwick and Shetland are providing what passengers and cruise operators want," said Melanie Henderson, Lerwick Port Authority Cruise Manager. "On top of Lonely Planet's recent praise for the islands, it's another tremendous boost for everyone involved in attracting and servicing the highly-competitive cruise sector."

Earlier this year, Shetland was named in the Lonely Planet's top 10 must-see European destinations for 2019, the only UK location included. This latest award is proof that the islands are fast becoming a destination of choice for tourists.

"We're thrilled that Lerwick has been recognised as one of the best places in Britain and Western Europe for cruise passengers to visit," continued Lauren Doughton, Project Manager at Promote Shetland. "The fact that the awards are voted for by the passengers themselves, based on their positive experiences in Shetland, is testament to the warm welcome and first-class facilities they find when they arrive here."

Lerwick street nominated for national award

With its network of lanes and short distance from Lerwick's historic waterfront, it's little wonder that Commercial Street has been nominated as one of the most beautiful streets in Scotland. Affectionately known as 'Da Street' by locals, it serves as Shetland's main commercial centre and is home to a post office, banks and a number of independent shops, selling everything from knitwear and gifts to camera equipment, clothing and homeware.

Living Lerwick project manager Emma Miller, who entered Da Street for the award, is delighted it made the shortlist. She said "We all know that Commercial Street is a beautiful area, and now we have a chance to confirm that it is the most beautiful in the country! It's easy to forget how lucky we are to have a local high street with such a wide variety of goods and services available – and it's an added bonus that it's pretty stunning to look at."

Da Street faces competition from high streets in Ayr, Innerleithen, Kirkwall, Linlithgow, Lanark, Milngavie and Rothesay

Lilias Adie - A victim of Scotland's witch hunt

Lilias Adie, from Torryburn, Fife, died in 1704 while held in prison for her "confessed" crimes of being a witch and having sex with the devil. Her remains were buried on the beach between the low and the high tide marks under a large stone. Locals had sought to weigh down Ms Adie in her grave, perhaps to prevent her coming back to haunt them. By the 19th century, scientific curiosity outweighed zombie fears and antiquarians dug up Ms Adie, the only witch's grave in Scotland. Now plans are underway to create an memorial not just for Lilias but for all the women who perished after being accused of being a witch as Nick Drainey explains.

he mud is inches thick on the shore at Torryburn in Fife where the tide washes in twice a day, a fact Kate Stewart discovered when she took some visitors out a couple of weeks ago. The Fife councillor says: "I was way over my ankles within minutes. I could feel it pulling me down. And that was where they buried her."

Women had no voice

Lillias Adie died on August 29, 1704. She was, up until a month before her death, a simple and unimportant peasant woman but a great deal of trouble was gone to dig a grave in the intertidal zone of this part of the Firth of Forth shore and to place a large slab of sandstone over the top of her tomb. And that was because Lillias had been accused of being a witch - and had confessed. However, she had died in custody before the normal procedures in such cases could be carried out – have a witch beg for repentance, strangled, then burned in a cleansing fire. Without that, there was a danger that Lillias could rise from the dead and return to inflict evil on the village, so the stone and the location - covered by water for much of the time were designed to stop her returning.

It's known as a revenant burial, from the Old French meaning "to return" and it is the only verifiable example of such in Scotland. Its rediscovery in 2014, by Fife archaeologist Douglas Speirs, hasn't been just important in archaeological terms but also because it has led to calls for the whole cartoonish cliché of witches to be re-evaluated.

"We now know, we have known for many years, that there were no crimes, that these people were innocent but they were persecuted, they were tortured, they were humiliated. It was a gross injustice. And 85 per cent of them were women women had no voice, no defence," says Cllr Stewart.

Now, that revival of interest sparked by Lillias is at the centre of plans for a national memorial to all of Scotland's victims of witchcraft accusations and a new witches' trail along the coast of Fife. Witchcraft persecutions in Scotland began in the mid-16th century under the direction of the new puritanical Protestant Church. Four times more cases were tried in Scotland than England, despite its smaller size, with 3,300 accusations and 1,400 executions on record, although actual numbers are believed to be much higher. By the time Lillias was accused, witchcraft persecutions were actually tailing off - they'd peaked in the mid-1600s, with the last witch executed in 1727.

"Witchcraft died out in 18th century Scotland not because the Church and rural society stopped believing in witches, but because the town-based civil authorities were increasingly reluctant to sanction the burning of old, peasant women on the basis of the ridiculous confessions wrung out of them by sleep deprivation and maltreatment," says Douglas. "They wouldn't have gotten away with this in Torryburn just a few years later."

Bewitching

In June 1704 a special meeting of the kirk session was held to look into gossip that Lillias Adie and another woman, Janet Whyte, were witches. The accuser was Jean Bisset, a villager who had been drinking for several hours before she began ranting that Lillias was bewitching her. When another woman then also claimed Lillias had made her ill using witchcraft, Lillias was locked up in the local church. Just the day after she was imprisoned, Lillias began a series of extraordinary "confessions"; admitting that she was a witch, that she had been so since "the second burning of witches in this place" (thought to refer to witchcraft trials in Torryburn in 1666, 38 years earlier), that she had renounced her Christian baptism, had sex with Satan and joined in midnight dancing cabals with other witches and the Devil. And according to the minutes of the kirk session, she continued to make these assertions up until a few hours before her death.

The question is why after only a day in custody she would make a confession that we know today cannot have been true and which Lillias would have known would have led to her own death - four witches were burned at Culross, a mile down the road, in 1675; there were five executions for witchcraft in Fife between 1677 and 1701; the Paisley witch trials took place in 1697; and six witches had been accused in Pittenweem in 1704.

There are several theories including one which may shed light on why Lillias was accused in the first place; she was a very curious-looking woman. Her bones reveal that she was very tall (around 6ft) with a small head. She also had very prominent, protruding front teeth - her unusual appearance might not only have led some villagers to treat her as an outsider, but they may point to some form of learning difficulty. It is also believed, due to events she recalls during her interrogation, that she was quite old for the 18th century – between her late 50s and 70s - so there may even have been an element of dementia.

The other theory is that the records were plain and simply fabricated after the ageing, terrified and tormented Lillias died on August 29, a month after she was locked up, leaving the local minister, Reverend Allan Logan, with a potential legal problem. He wasn't allowed to put witches to death even after confession; they had to be brought to a proper trial, where many were, in fact, cleared especially in this later period. And, by this time, ministers who overstepped the mark could find themselves in hot water.

The fact that an uneducated peasant woman managed such a creative confession speaks to someone putting words into her mouth at the very least. But her descriptions, though imaginative, were not random. "Everything she confessed to is almost word for word taken from the contemporary, industry-standard handbook on identifying and dealing with witches, Daemonologie," says Douglas. A book which a poor peasant woman would have been unfamiliar with - but not an educated minister. And conveniently her confession ticked every box required to convict a witch, should the authorities have later inquired.

Watermark grave

It's impossible to ever know. But Lillias's watermark grave was known locally for generations, being opened up in 1852 and the bones removed. Its exact location had never been recorded, though, until Douglas went looking for it in 2014. Since then, the interest in Lillias, and through her the other victims of witchcraft persecutions, has grown, with a reconstruction of her face from photographs of her skull and a wreath laying ceremony at the shore on the anniversary of her death in August.

Organisers are now working with local artists on plans for the memorial, which may include the Stevenson-built Beamer beacon lighthouse, moved from its original location when the new Forth crossing was built. Potential locations include at Torryburn itself or elsewhere on the coastline including at Culross, a mile away, and already a focus for visitors thanks to its Outlander connections.

As for Lillias, her return has had nothing of the diabolical implications the villagers of her time feared. In August, at the anniversary of her death a crowd gathered at the shore near her grave to lay a wreath on the water. Among the crowd was historian and BBC radio presenter Dr Louise Yeoman, who has produced and presented a series of podcasts on Scottish witchcraft. She says: "It was like she was being welcomed back into the community."

Clan Carruthers announces Chief after 210 years

lan Carruthers Society International is extremely pleased to announce that Carruthers, after 210 years, has again a recognised Chief. Dr. Simon Peter Carruthers of Holmains has been recognised as Chief of Clan Carruthers by the Lord Lyon King of Arms, Dr Joseph Morrow, CBE, KStJ, QC, DL, LLD, the arbiter in determining chiefships through the confirmation of the right to bear the hereditary Chiefly Arms of a Scottish clan or family.

Origins in Dumfriesshire

In a Decision issued on 19th August 2019 and published on 9th September 2019, the Lord Lyon found Peter; "entitled to be recognised in the name, style and title of; 'Simon Peter Carruthers of Holmains, Chief of the Name and Arms of Carruthers' and maintained, ratified and confirmed the undifferenced Arms of Carruthers of Holmains c. 1672".

This decision followed nearly 20 months of proceedings before the Lord Lyon, including two hearings of the Lyon Court in Edinburgh. The last of which was held on March 2019, at which Dr. S. P. Carruthers was represented by Sir Crispin Agnew of Lochnaw, Bt, QC.

Dr. Carruthers succeeds his fourth greatgrandfather, John Carruthers, 12th of Holmains & Kirkwood (died 1809), the last recognised head of the Carruthers family. John 12th was a direct descendant of the first chiefs of Carruthers, dating back to the 13th century.

The Carruthers are an ancient Scottish family from Annandale in the Anglo-Scottish Borders. They were one of the Scottish 'unruly clans' named in the 1587 Act of the Scottish Parliament and the Laird of Holmains (Holmends) was one of the chiefs listed. From their origins in Dumfriesshire, Carruthers have spread across the world and are today represented in every continent.

Dr Simon Peter Carruthers (64, known as Peter) is an agricultural scientist, with further qualifications in management and theology. For many years he was on the staff of the Centre for Agricultural Strategy at the University of Reading. Subsequently he worked in environmental education and rural policy in the public and third sectors. Currently, he is Director of a Christian charity that supports the rural church. He is a co-founder and former Chairman of Farm Crisis Network (now the Farming Community Network) in the UK, is a member of the Royal Society of Biology and an Honorary Senior Fellow at the University of Worcester.

A unique and special family

Peter is quoted as saying; "The Carruthers are a unique and special family. There are many more of us in Scotland, the UK and around the globe than people realise! And over the centuries we have had many distinguished family members, some known and some unsung, who have served their countries and contributed to human flourishing and the common good. It is therefore a great privilege and a sober responsibility to have inherited the position of Chief of Carruthers and I will do my best to lead and serve the family in our future together."

Dr George Carruthers, FSA Scot, Convenor of the Clan Carruthers Society International stated: "Not only is this wonderful news to have Chief recognised and in place, it also means that with the confirmation of our hereditary Chief, Carruthers are no longer an armigerous clan.

It may have taken 12 long years of research, hard work and waiting, but we can now take our rightful place alongside the many other Scottish clans with legally accepted chiefs and be recognised in our own right as a 'noble incorporation. This is a great moment for Carruthers worldwide and more importantly for all of our family who proudly look to Scotland's heritage and culture for their roots and a sense of belonging. The congratulations we have already received from many across the world, both from Carruthers and members and chiefs of other clans, have been humbling and heart-warming. These messages of congratulations have been conveyed to our Chief, who hopes that this will help gather the Carruthers together under one banner and further encourage other armigerous clans to persevere in seeking to identify and confirm their Chiefs or Commanders, through the auspices of the Lyon Court."

The Arms of Carruthers of Holmains, which only the Chief can legally bear are: 'Gules, two chevrons engrailed between three fleur de-lis Or. The crest is 'a seraphim volant Proper' and the motto, 'Promptus et fidelis' (ready and faithful).

The Clan Carruthers Society International (CCSI) was founded in January 2017 and is officially recognised by the Chief of Carruthers as representing the worldwide Carruthers family. It is non-commercial, apolitical and non-partisan and is open to any member of the international Carruthers family and derivatives of that name. The Society is based in the United Kingdom, but is represented by an international Executive Council. For further details visit: www.clancarrutherssociety.org
