The Banner Says...

That's my Uncle!

by Sean Cairney

For nearly twenty years I spent each January in Scotland. It may not have been the warmest month and I certainly missed out on the long evenings of light but it for me was always a special time to see the country. I visited many parts of Scotland on its coldest and darkest days and loved it. The nation may have been quieter in terms of tourists and some attractions are not open but sharing Scotland with locals was always enjoyable. I do however have a memory of taking a cruise on Loch Ness and wondering if I would lose extremities to the cold coming off the beautiful waters.

John Cairney

Of course, part of being there in January was celebrating Burns Night. I have managed to attend several Burns Nights around the world and realise how lucky the Scottish community is to have this opportunity to celebrate not only Burns, but Scottish culture and tradition in the midst (for many) of winter. There are many great aspects people enjoy of a Burns Night from hearing poetry, music and connecting with friends. However, for me Burns Night and suppers will always bring back memories of family. The obvious for me is my Uncle, John Cairney, who has been so well known to audiences around both Scotland and the world through his one man shows about Burns and has been considered one of the leading interpreters of the works of the Bard for many years. Uncle John came often to Canada where he would perform to audiences at sell out nights hosted by our family. From a young age I helped at these events, it could be clearing plates or setting up chairs and at times, much to my great embarrassment, being dragged up on stage by my Uncle to hold the haggis as he recited an Address To A Haggis.

I remember being asked by a lady at a Highland Games if I knew who Robert Burns was. I quite quickly and surely answered: "That's my Uncle!"

When I was much younger I did blur the lines of Burns and my Uncle. I remember being asked by a lady at a Highland Games if I knew who Robert Burns was. I quite quickly and surely answered: "That's my Uncle!"

Of course, Uncle John was not Robert Burns, he in fact is a celebrated actor who in addition to connecting many to the works of Burns appeared in feature films such as Cleopatra and Jason and the Argonauts. Uncle John also became an author of several books and has exhibited his artwork as a painter. For me though he remains my Uncle and someone I look forward to seeing, regardless of the month of visit, on my next trip to Scotland.

In this issue

This year many Burns Night's are not going ahead sadly. However, this month we are still highlighting one of Scotland's great sons. 1796 was a long time ago, however since the death of Robert Burns he has inspired many people across the globe. From writers to politicians and musicians Robert Burns legacy has left a global footprint.

That footprint was even left on money, as Burns wrote a poem on a Bank of Scotland guinea note. Amazingly nearly 40 years after his death the skull of Robert Burns was taken from his crypt by phrenologists (those who believe the bumps on your head can explain your personality and character).

This month is Greyfriars Bobby Day. The story of the loyal dog has been woven into Edinburgh folklore for years and the Skye Terrier's statue is one of the most popular in the city. The statue sits just outside Greyfriars Kirkyard, a place that has been called 'the world's most haunted graveyard' -surely that is saying something! The burial ground has quite an illustrious history and is well worth a visit, if you dare.

The pipe band movement has no doubt had a tough year. With band practices and competitions not possible for many. The fraternity of the pipe band movement is without question one of many members with bands all coming together in both competition and friendship. It is good to see new ways bands across the world are both innovating and looking forward to 2021.

As we ring in 2021, I hope the year ahead will be much kinder to the world. I also hope our events can get back on track for 2021 and most importantly we all keep safe. I will of course not be visiting Scotland this month and I look forward to the next time I can look out the airplane window to catch the first glimpses of either Glasgow or Edinburgh and know- I am back. One thing that this year will bring (in July) is the 45th anniversary of the Scottish Banner, a huge milestone for sure and one that was never expected. So, thank you to our amazing readers, advertisers and supporters and I wish you and yours the very best for the year ahead. 🍷

Celtic Connections 2021 Digital first festival

Celtic Connections has announced the first list of artists who will perform as part of their digital-first festival this January. Across 19 days, the festival will present online performances every night between Friday 15th January - Tuesday 2nd February 2021. World class performances will be available to view online with some of the biggest names on the Scottish music scene and beyond appearing on screens across the world as part of the winter festival.

The festival is creating unique digital content from specially commissioned projects and performances filmed across many of Glasgow's much-loved venues. In doing so the festival will support and encourage the creative industries to help protect Scotland's rich musical legacy. Celtic Connections also welcomes BBC ALBA as a broadcast partner with exclusive performances and a new series of Seirm@Celtic Connections.

The initial line-up has been announced with some of the most well-known and best-loved acts who have traditionally graced the festival stages confirmed to take part in this digital-first event. Celtic Connections prides itself on its international relations and every year it showcases artists from across the world. Organisers have ensured that a number of international acts who have filmed their performances remotely are also included in the line-up alongside a host of incredible homegrown talent.

A love of music with its roots in Scotland

Annually welcoming over 100,000 attendees to Glasgow, a UNESCO City of Music, organisers hope the festival's digital-first programme will appeal to the wide international audience they traditionally see attending the festival. With the festival's global audiences in mind, they have allowed for all shows to be available for a week after they are first streamed to alleviate any restrictions for different time zones enjoying the range of content.

Donald Shaw, Creative Producer for Celtic Connections, said: "It has been a challenging but exciting process pulling this year's digital festival together. I would like to say a huge thank you to all of the musicians who have contributed both at home and abroad, it has been brilliant to see them all get behind the concept and support our vision. We can't wait to bring all of this great music into people's homes this January!"

Councillor David McDonald, Chair of Glasgow Life and Depute Leader of Glasgow City Council said: "The announcement of the programme for Celtic Connections is always an exciting moment giving a glimpse of the outstanding performances to look forward to in January. This year, more than ever, the festival will connect people around the world through a love of music with its roots in Scotland. It will be a major showcase for some incredible talent and will be a reminder of the hope we all have of being back in venues in the near future to enjoy live performances."

Celtic Connections began in 1994, when its 66 events centred around one venue, the Glasgow Royal Concert Hall, and welcomed 27,000 attendees. Since those early days Celtic Connections has become more adventurous, more experimental and more diverse and now annually welcomes over 100,000 attendees and over 300 artists to Glasgow for over 2000 events. The diverse programme has traditionally included world-class concerts and one-off musical collaborations alongside talks, workshops, film screenings, theatre productions, ceilidhs, exhibitions, free events and late-night sessions.

A huge range of musical genres are showcased across the festival, as well as genre-busting performances that defy any attempt at categorisation. This, alongside a host of special commissions and creative collaborations, have made the festival both distinctive and internationally acclaimed.

Clan remote outreach

Hello! Ciamar a tha thu! I am reaching out to connect with any folks worldwide/ throughout the Airts that are Chief's Officers or leaders of their (mostly Scotland-based) Clan Associations/ Societies. This writer is a Member of Council of the worldwide Clan Chattan Association in Scotland. CCA Council had a Zoom Meeting yesterday discussing 2021 CCA AGM and beyond. In our conversation we were wondering what other clan entities in Scotland were doing towards producing remote live events and Clan gatherings. We noted how well the Clan Farquharson Association did with its recent wonderful remote Gathering. If you are in the leadership group of your clan, I would like to touch base with you to get an overview of best practises that you are doing in your remote outreach, digital clan events, etc. I will then present this to my own Council to noodle as we all chart a course heading and a way forward to connect with clans folk around the world and to keep the clan strong in these concerning and challenging times. Feel free to Facebook message me.

Scottishness in Modern South Australia

South Australia currently has the second highest percentage of Scots born in Australia and probably the highest rate of descendants. It has well over 100 listed Scottish organisations and many more bodies that have significant Scottish connections.

A four year academic research program conducted by academic and former senior executive, Ron Layton of Adelaide, has resulted in a report being provided for the Scottish Government as part of its provision of significant Culture Strategy for a country that regards culture as of major importance. Mr Layton has previously submitted recommendations and these have been included in the Government's 'A Culture Strategy for Scotland' that serves as the blueprint for development over the next period.

The research has also seen the publishing, in September, of the book: Scottishness in Modern South Australia. It has been designed to show that the Scottish development in the State was different to other parts of Australia, possibly leading to a similarly variant in current representation today. It has also shown that the 'Scottish' culture in a region where Scots have settled over the centuries is only loosely linked to the home country, Scotland. Indeed each region develops in its own manner, a function of the overall regional cultural context. Thus, what we find in SA is different from any other part of Australia, although much of the expected key identifying elements, such as piping and dancing are similar.

Cognisant of how important culture in all its forms is to Scotland there has been increasing recognition that the immense diaspora needs to be drawn into any strategy. This relates to the wide range of what might be regarded as culture. At the same time there has been criticism of what has been seen by some as the oversimplicity and nostalgia orientation of Scottish related bodies overseas: 'Scotland is much, much more than just bagpipes, dancing and Burns!'

The study sought to explore this contention in some depth. It found, for example that most of the consideration of things Scottish was outside of the organisations, many of which are small, narrowly focused and struggling to appeal and engage people of Scottish descent or others with related interests. Whether this is a problem or not is also explored on the basis that these bodies are only a part of Scottishness within any region. However, there was some indication that there would be considerable value in at least some Scottish organisations to far better take on board the more broad cultural components.

The book is well worth examination. Copies are available through Matilda Books in Stirling, South Australia.

Placing a marker for James Fleming, Highland Games Champion, at his unmarked grave in Melbourne, Australia

As I am in Campbelltown in Scotland it's a wee bit difficult to oversee the placement of a plaque or a gravestone in Melbourne's General Cemetery, Victoria, Australia. This would be for James Fleming, 1840-1887, a Highland Games competitor. He lies in an unmarked grave which is doubly unfortunate as he was one of the Highland Gatherings best sportsmen.

If I were in Melbourne, I would be able to undertake this easily enough. Could you possibly inform me if interest could be raised to put some mark of recognition in place as this is something that I'd dearly love to make possible?
Thank you very much,

A year in piping – A look back and a look forward

Pipe Band Championships are scheduled to take place in Maxville, Ontario July 30th and 31st and the World Pipe Band Championships are scheduled for August 13th and 14th at Glasgow Green.

With 2020 being the year that none of us expected in piping, we thought we would take this opportunity to look back at 2020 for the great things that did happen and that brought us closer, as well as those that we missed, then look forward into 2021 to see what light might be at the end of the COVID tunnel in piping across the world. In January 2020, The National Piping Centre had its year pretty well mapped out. Like piping organisations across the world, it had its plan of competitions, schools, festivals and events. This plan all started off well, with the annual Junior Piping Championships in February and the Competition League for Amateur Solo Pipers (CLASP) all going ahead. Our schools in Bruggen and Homburg also took place. Then the day before the Duncan Johnstone Memorial Competition, for professional B & C graded pipers, the pandemic took effect and everything was cancelled.

events happen, giving pipers something to work towards, to practice for and as a way of staging in touch with each other.

Online events

Piping and drumming schools also transitioned well into online events, with Piping Hot Summer Drummer and The National Piping Centre's own Adult Gatherings successfully happening online. One unexpectedly great outcome was the ability to have people from across the world join the schools. The TNPC schools saw pipers and drummers from around 10 countries join in, leading to 2 time zones for lessons being introduced.

Looking ahead to 2021

So much of 2020 was lost, but with the move to online competition, events moving online to give fans across the world great events to tune into, as well as news of the vaccine across the world, are giving us hope for 2021. The NPC Junior Competition has moved online, along with plans for more Adult Gatherings. There have been two successful pipe band events in New Zealand and Australia in November 2020, giving us cautious optimism for the summer ahead. The 2021 New Zealand Pipe Band Championships have been confirmed for Hawkes Bay on 19th and 20th March 2021. The North American

So much has been learned and gained, as well as lost, in 2020. Being able to take piping music online has helped bring people together at a time when they needed it most. But we know that what online can't replace is the gathering together. We look forward to 2021 and hope that we can all gather together again to enjoy the music that we love.

The National Piping Centre is a charity, registered in Scotland. It has had a very tough year, and if you would like to help support the work it does in promoting the history and study of this great instrument and more, please go to www.thepipingcentre.co.uk and donate now through PayPal.

Being able to take piping music online has helped bring people together at a time when they needed it most.

The major season in the UK was cancelled, right up to the World Pipe Band Championships, but with the first wave ending, the team behind Piping Live! brought the festival online. With just a few events that gave the flavour of the in-person festival, they delivered 6 events across the week. The Big Rab Show and others across the world held virtual World's parties to mark what should have been the highlight of the pipe band calendar.

As the summer moved on, piping organisations planned more online events, with junior competitions running successfully for Shotts, Turriff and District and so many more, helping to inspire young players to keep piping and drumming. Then moving into October, the Glenfiddich went online. With only the 10 competitors and a few support staff of techy folk and organisers, the Glenfiddich Piping Championship went online from Blair Castle on 31st October. It was a "best of the best" year with still competing champions and second places invited to take part to keep the 10 piper format. This fantastic day of piping saw over 700 people tune in to see two second places give a third overall win of this prestigious competition to Stuart Liddell, P/M of the 2019 World Champions Inveraray and District Pipe Band. Willie McCallum took home the MSR trophy and Jack Lee won the Piobaireachd event. More events have moved online since to great success, with the Piobaireachd Society providing a great night of music at the end of November.

Scotland the Brave

In those first few weeks of lockdown, a nice ritual began in the UK – the #ClapforCarers – where at 8pm on Thursdays, people gathered on their front doorsteps to show their appreciation for the National Health Service and all the key workers. For the second week of this national movement, The National Piping Centre organized and mobilized pipers from across the world into action to show their gratitude in the only way we know how – by playing. At 8pm UK time worldwide, Scotland the Brave rang out with over 2000 pipers and drummers inspired to play with just a few days' notice.

With most of the piping year grinding to a halt, it became obvious that we needed to find a new way of working. The CLASP was one of the events at the forefront of this, staging some of the first online events, leading the way in how to run a competition online well. Other online competitions across the globe, for all ages and piping stages have followed, all with their own creative way of making these

Scotspeak is a selection of quotes which made headlines in Scotland last month on a variety of current Scottish affairs.

"We are extremely pleased to be working with Urras nan Tursachan on this exciting new project. The landscape holds so many fascinating secrets that we hope can be addressed through a combination of geophysical remote sensing and boots-on-the-ground with the local community volunteers."

Dr Richard Bates of the University of St Andrews said as funding has been made available to discover the secrets of hidden stone circles on the Isle of Lewis. The new project will allow the team and community to extend the investigations to the other stone sites and importantly to map the Neolithic landscape buried beneath the peat and submerged offshore. Community volunteers helped to survey one of the satellite stone circle sites close to Calanais and the team of experts was able to create images of the buried stone circle and also discover that a major lightning strike had occurred at the centre of the stone circle.

"The Scottish Government has made the right decision in this particular instance. It underlines the importance of maintaining the integrity of the battlefield and its surroundings for future generations. This decision will be welcomed nationally and internationally, underlining the importance of Culloden in world history, and I hope this is indicative of the stance that the Scottish Government take regarding future applications in and around the battlefield conservation area."

Councillor Ken Gowans said after plans to build a house on the historic Culloden Battlefield was rejected by Scottish Government ministers. Culloden Battlefield was the scene of major fighting during the battle in April 1746 between the Jacobites and British forces.

"The Kingston Bridge has become an iconic landmark in Glasgow, so I'm pleased to see its 50 years of operation being recognised in this way. The crossing played its part in taking a significant amount of traffic off the city centre streets and paved the way for the pedestrianisation of Sauchiehall Street, Buchanan Street and Argyle Street. It has also courted some controversy over the past half century, but there is no doubt it continues to play a vital role today. The work that's been carried out to ensure it continues to do this job in the future has won civil engineering awards, so having the Kingston Bridge formally listed is a fitting way to mark its impact over the past 50 years."

Michael Matheson, Cabinet Secretary for Transport, Infrastructure and Connectivity, said as Glasgow's Kingston Bridge has been recognised with listing status at Category C for its special architectural and historic interest.

Through listing, the bridge has been recognised as a significant – albeit controversial – infrastructure project which transformed the city of Glasgow. Forming part of the M8, Scotland's first motorway, its construction reflected the social and economic changes taking place in Scotland's cities in the mid-20th century, as private car ownership rapidly rose.

"I am pleased to announce that the vaccine is now in Scotland and being stored safely in order for vaccinations to begin. Science has given us hope and we are starting on a journey which will eventually allow us to escape this terrible virus. Following clinical advice from the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation, we will begin with those groups which have been prioritised to address 99% of preventable deaths associated with Covid-19. These include the elderly, care home residents and staff, and frontline health and social care workers."

Scotland's Health Secretary Jeane Freeman said as Scotland received its first delivery of the new coronavirus vaccine in December. It is the largest immunisation programme in NHS history.

"The Crown makes a welcome return to Netflix and we look forward to seeing the dramatic landscapes and estates of the Highlands recreating pivotal royal moments from the past. The impact of film and TV goes far beyond the production spend, with research finding that one in five visitors are inspired to plan a trip to Scotland after seeing it on-screen. The streaming platform's ability to engage with a huge worldwide audience will help strengthen our on-screen presence and keep the Highlands, and Scotland, front of mind for potential visitors in the future."

Chris Taylor, Regional Leadership Director at VisitScotland, said as Caithness, Inverness-shire and the Cairngorms take on starring roles in award-winning Netflix series, The Crown, as it recently returned to screens for a fourth series. The Highlands is one of around 90 different UK locations which features in the series posing as royal residences and even places further afield. More than 70 million households worldwide have watched the royal drama since it began in 2016, according to Netflix.

"Getting to 560,000 is a huge success – it's a gangbuster. We want all our courses to be as representative as possible and the course now has recorded audio from 17 speakers from across the Highlands, Islands and Lowlands of Scotland."

UK manager of language learning app Duolingo, Colin Watkins, said over 560,000 people around the world have signed up to learn Gaelic – nearly ten times the official number of native speakers. The Gaelic app launched in 2019 and has nearly one third of participants hailing from Scotland, an additional third from the USA and the remainder from the rest from across the world.

Lady MacGregor's Scotland By: Lady Fiona MacGregor

Sir Malcolm MacGregor of MacGregor on a climb.

Lady MacGregor of MacGregor – otherwise known as British writer and broadcaster Fiona Armstrong - works for ITV news and current affairs. Fiona's husband is the Chief of Clan Gregor, Sir Malcolm MacGregor of MacGregor. She is an active member of Clan Armstrong, so their lives are interwoven with all things tartan. The couple live in the Scottish Borderlands, although filming and writing takes Fiona all over Scotland.

Greetings from Scotland. Still a mild place for this time of year. But whilst it may not be cold, it is wet. Which is perhaps not the best conditions to go up into the hills. Then, as they say, if you wait for a good day in Scotland, you'll never do any climbing...

The Fox of Glencoe

One man who scaled an awful lot of heights in his time was the legendary Dr Hamish MacInnes. A great character, nicely eccentric and driven to conquer the most demanding peaks, he was said to be Scotland's greatest mountaineer. I say 'was' because Dr MacInnes has just died. Yet his legacy lives on. This intrepid Scotsman invented a rescue stretcher. He designed a revolutionary metal ice axe and wrote numerous mountaineering books. He led some twenty climbing expeditions, including ones to Everest. Back at home he set up local mountain rescue teams and was an advisor on Hollywood films that involved climbs. Born in the south, in the Galloway hills, Dr MacInnes went to live in the Highlands – and there in the shadow of Glencoe could surround himself with ever more towering peaks.

Hauling yourself up a sheer rock face is not for the faint hearted, but the 'Fox of Glencoe', so-called because of his cunning in the high hills, was a great survivor. He was ninety when he passed away.

Munros

The urge to climb is in many a Scotsman's blood. The Cairngorm Club, based in Aberdeen, was founded in the late Victorian age. Then came the Scottish Mountaineering Club which was started in Glasgow. Among the founders of the latter was Sir Hugh Munro; born in England, but with a family estate in Scotland.

The urge to climb is in many a Scotsman's blood.

And it was he who compiled the list of Scottish peaks over three thousand feet. They were called 'Munros', and there were 282 of them, the highest being Ben Nevis at nearly four and a half thousand feet. If you climb them all – or go 'Munro bagging', as it is cheekily known – you will be eligible to join the exclusive Munro Society.

Then Scottish women, too, have made their mark in this area. The Ladies Scottish Climbing Club was formed in Perthshire in 1908, its members photographed in fetching tweed jackets and britches. Such attire would have been rather daring. Earlier photos from the Victorian age show female mountaineers in long skirts. How they ever got to the top is a mystery. As you can see from the picture, the young MacGregor also did his share of climbs in his day. They are usually in search of that elusive photograph. One time he was not heard from for three days and I phoned a Highland police station in a panic. Of course, he turned up later that day safe and sound.

Delilah

Someone else who can easily disappear is young Delilah. You may recall she's our daughter's dog. Delilah is a Chow Chow and has a habit of going missing, but the latest escape really took the biscuit. I got home from work to find the house in chaos. Because someone, it seemed, had left a door open. Dusk was falling and we set off in various directions. Calling in the rain. Returning soaked and empty-handed. 'She'll come back,' the chief said, sounding more cheerful than he looked. 'Why, ninety-five percent of dogs that go missing turn up...'

Eventually we went to bed. Back and front doors were left open with a bowl of food at either end. The rain continued. Wind rattled the windows. And Delilah, not yet a year old, was out alone in this?! Twice the chief went to check, but no sign. We got up early, and when it was light enough started another search. Through the woodland and out into the fields. By now the police had been rung. It was all over the community pages. Someone texted to say they could put a drone up to help with the search. Another reported suspicious drivers, possibly pet snatchers, being seen in the locality.

Then our cleaner arrived. 'Have you checked right through the house?' this wonderful woman asked. I assured her that the place had been searched from top to bottom. She took the Hoover upstairs. A shriek followed as a door was opened and Delilah staggered out from a little-used bedroom. She had eaten some of the carpet, but other than looking a bit indignant, appeared none the worse for wear for her sixteen-hour ordeal.

The strange thing is that she never barked once. When the room was checked she must have been sleeping soundly under the bed. Tawny and lion-like, she's an adorable creature, but she'd be no good on a climb, lazy thing that she is...

FOR THE COMMUNITY BY THE COMMUNITY

The Bundanoon Highland Gathering Inc. (BHGCI) are delighted to announce that the grand raffle for their 2021 Brigadoon Gathering is now LIVE.

First there was the bushfires, then the floods and rain now COVID-19 which led to the cancellation of our 2020 Gathering. Because of this drastic chain of events we were unable to make any financial donations to our volunteer groups, specifically our donation of 10% of gate takings to the Rural Fire Service for their outstanding work.

Even in the unlikely occasion that Covid-19 is still around and restrictions are in place the Raffle WILL still go ahead.

The Draw: Will take place during the gathering on the 17th April, 2021.

Full details regarding the prize list can be viewed at: <https://brigadoon.org.au/brigadoon-grand-raffle/>

To date there have been some extremely generous people out there to which we are deeply indebted. Many donations have been sourced locally however the prize list extends to throughout Australia, and even from the UK.

It is hoped that people will get behind this initiative and support Brigadoon by buying a ticket (or two) now that they are available.

Of bards and banknotes

By: Siân Yates, Bank of Scotland archivist

Siân Yates, archivist at Bank of Scotland, tells us about some historical links between Robert Burns and Scotland's oldest bank.

A replica bust of Burns is accepting contactless donations at the Robert Burns Birthplace Museum.

The National Trust of Scotland recently launched a partnership with Bank of Scotland and Visa: 'Tap the Past to Preserve the Future'. This exciting initiative allows supporters to make contactless donations. Re-creations of two unique Scottish artefacts were unveiled at Robert Burns Birthplace Museum in Alloway and Fyvie Castle in Aberdeenshire, acting as contactless donation points.

Siân Yates, archivist at Bank of Scotland, said: "Did you know Scotland's national bard once wrote a poem, quite literally, on a banknote?"

Lines written on a banknote

In 1786, Burns scrawled the following lines on the back of a Bank of Scotland guinea note:

*Wae worth thy pow'r, thou cursed leaf!
Fell source o' a' my woe and grief!
For lake o' thee I've lost my lass!
For lake o' thee I scrimp my glass!
I see the children of Affliction
Unaided, thro' thy curst restriction:
I've seen the Oppressor's cruel smile
Amid his hapless victim's spoil;
And for thy potence vainly wish'd,
To crush the Villain in the dust:
For lake o' thee I leave this much-lov'd shore,
Never perhaps, to greet old Scotland more!*

The banknote, with the original verse penned in Burns' hand, is in the collection today at the National Trust of Scotland's Robert Burns Birthplace Museum in Alloway. Lines written on a banknote was drafted at a difficult time in the poet's life. Still a young man and yet to prove himself as a writer, Burns was in financial doldrums. The farm he and his brother Gilbert leased was failing. Plans to marry his sweetheart, Jean Armour, had been thwarted by his penurious state. Oh 'cursed leaf' indeed. In despair, Burns was planning to leave 'this much-lov'd shore' to seek his fortune in Jamaica.

But within a few months everything had changed. Burns' first collection, Poems, Chiefly in the Scottish Dialect, was published in Kilmarnock – and was a huge success. Rather than voyaging to the West Indies, Burns travelled to Edinburgh, where he was welcomed by the capital's literati. The rest, as they say, is history.

Links with the Bank of Scotland

Apart from writing a poem on one of its notes, what further links did Robert Burns have with Bank of Scotland? He certainly had personal connections with several officials of the Bank in various capacities. For a number of years in the late 1780s, Burns leased a farm at Ellisland near Dumfries from Patrick Miller of Dalswinton. Miller was a director of the Bank, and later Deputy Governor. Though Burns' tenure at Ellisland was not a very fruitful one (he gave it up in 1790), his friendship with Miller endured.

After leaving Ellisland, Burns moved to the town of Dumfries itself. Here he befriended David Staig, the town's Provost and agent (manager) of the Bank of Scotland branch there. A number of letters between Burns and Staig survive. And after Burns' death in 1796, Staig played a prominent role in raising funds for the Dumfries Burns Mausoleum. He was also a founder member of the Dumfries Burns Club.

Was Burns a customer of the Dumfries branch? It is a tantalising possibility, but unfortunately we cannot say for certain. Ledgers for the period 1788–95 have not survived. But later records do show that

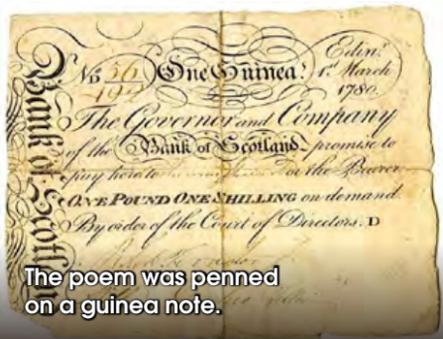

Robert Burns had planned to leave Scotland.

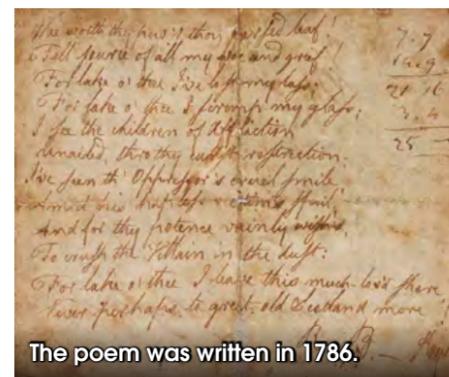

Burns' brother, Gilbert, had an account there, as well as the long-suffering Jean Armour – identified as 'Mrs Robert Burns'.

Examples of Bank of Scotland notes stretching back to 1716, and displays about notable customers (including Mrs Burns), can be found at Museum on the Mound located at Bank of Scotland's head office in Edinburgh.

The poem was penned on a guinea note.

The poem was written in 1786.

Tracing of Declaration of Arbroath signatories highlighted in report

Coat of arms of King Robert I of Scotland.

Signatories of one of Scotland's most famous historical documents, and their descendants, have been highlighted in research by the University of Strathclyde. Genealogy researchers at the University have compiled a progress report on the family histories of the men who put their names or attached their seals to the 1320 Declaration of Arbroath, which asserted Scottish sovereignty.

The Declaration of Arbroath Family History Project has, to date, gathered information on 40 of the document's 48 signatories, while the remaining eight were covered in the previous Battle of Bannockburn Family History Project. The new report focuses on 15 of them, along with King Robert the Bruce.

The report is based on research by Postgraduate Diploma students at Strathclyde and staff from the University's Genealogical Studies Postgraduate Programme. It was published to coincide with St Andrew's Day on November 30th.

Graham Holton is Principal Tutor on Strathclyde's Genealogical Studies Postgraduate Programme, based in the University's Centre for Lifelong Learning.

He said: "The project was devised to provide a learning opportunity for our Postgraduate Diploma students to carry out research in medieval genealogy, to research the lives and families of the 'signatories' of the Declaration, including present-day descendants, and to develop methodologies for the use of genetic genealogy in tracing early descents.

Brief biographies, four-generation genealogies and coats of arms have now been compiled for the 48 signatories, forming a significant foundation for further research and covering a number of lesser known barons. The genetic genealogy research is very much ongoing and conclusions are likely to be refined and clarified in due course. However, considerable progress has been made in reaching a number of significant conclusions and it is appropriate that these should be made more widely known at this stage. Collaboration with several surname DNA projects has been an important aspect of the research."

Dunbar; Seton; Boyd and Stewart

The researchers have reached firm conclusions about descents from four families: Dunbar; Seton; Boyd and Stewart.

The Dunbar family has what is likely to be one of the longest British unbroken documented male line ancestries, descending from Crinan the Thane, who was born around the late 10th century and has male line descendants to this day, as shown by both documentary and DNA evidence. Patrick Dunbar, Earl of March, who is named in the Declaration of Arbroath, left no male line descendants, but three baronetcies still exist, held by descendants of his brother Alexander.

Research has identified DNA markers called SNPs (single nucleotide polymorphisms), which indicate descent from Alexander Dunbar. At least 10 descendants of Alexander in the UK and North America, including three with documented unbroken descents to Alexander, have tested confirming the markers as indicative of this descent.

It has been suggested that the ancestry of the Seton family was originally Flemish but it is certain that the family settled in Lothian, where Alexander de Seton held land which was probably granted to him by King David I of Scotland, in the mid-12th century.

The Alexander Seton who placed his seal on the Declaration left no sons of his own but his daughter, Margaret, married Alan de Wyntoun, who was very likely a Seton by descent the family having taken the surname from their estate of Wyntoun. Many of their male line descendants are living today.

Through changes of surname connected with inheritance, some Setons took the name Gordon. Any men of the surname Gordon who carry a specific SNP can now be identified as being from the branch of the family who are genetically Setons and therefore descendants of Alexander Seton, 1st Earl of Huntly, who lived in the 15th century.

Genetic markers

Previous research by the project found that Philip Stead, a postgraduate student at Strathclyde, has ancestry to Alexander

Seton, the signatory of the Declaration, and is being descended from a child of George Seton, the Fifth Earl of Winton, who lived in the first half of the 18th century.

The project has also identified descendants of the Boyd family, which includes Earls of Kilmarnock and which was first recorded in Irvine, North Ayrshire, in 1205. A member of this family was Sir Robert Boyd of Noddsdale, who was a prominent supporter of King Robert the Bruce, although not a signatory of the Declaration.

Considerable progress had been made in researching the Stewart family in the earlier Battle of Bannockburn Family History Project, in particular the identification of genetic markers indicating descent from two of the sons of King Robert II. This has now been supplemented by the significant discovery of a marker showing descent from another of his sons, Robert Stewart, Duke of Albany (1340-1420). This is an important development, meaning that Stewart men carrying one of three specific SNP markers can now be identified as descendants of King Robert III, the Duke of Albany or Sir John Stewart, Sheriff of Bute.

The researchers hope to be able to stage a public exhibition based on the project in 2021.

The Declaration of Arbroath Family History Project Report is published by the Foundation for Medieval Genealogy, on behalf of Strathclyde's Centre for Lifelong Learning and can be ordered through the Foundation's online shop: <https://fmg.ac/shop/bookshop>

There was a man called Robert Burns

I enclose a Burns song which ended quite a few of my Burns performances. It was lustily sung by audiences after the show and some people did say it even sounded like a Scottish anthem. It was written for children to sing as they didn't like the old-fashioned Victorian lines of the original The Star o' Robbie Burns song. The adults picked up on it and it went on from there and must be sung lustily.

John Cairney

There was a man called Robert Burns

Words by John Cairney
(to the tune of The Star o' Robbie Burns)

There was a man called Robert Burns
Was born nearby auld Ayr,
He made the songs that Scotland sings,
For all the world to share.

The songs that we all sing today
Sprung from his ready pen,
He gave us hope, he gave us pride,
And so, we sing again.

Chorus:
*Let Scotland as a nation rise,
The Lion Rampant roar,
A poet spoke for all of us,
And will for evermore.*

Though he was born a poor man's son
And lived a life of toil
He put sweet words upon the page
That time will never spoil.

He reaches out to every heart,
And touches every soul,
In every place in every land
He's known from pole to pole.

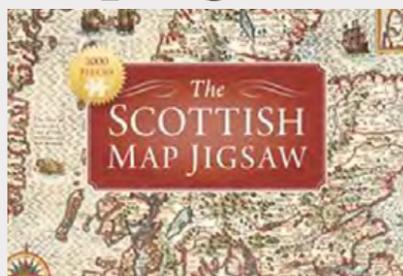

Chorus

His life among us here was short
Just thirty-seven years,
Yet in that time he gave the world
The answer to its fears.

That man to man are brother's a',
Beneath the shining sun
Where peace and love and harmony
Will make us all as one.

Chorus

The Scottish Map Jigsaw

This unique 1000 piece jigsaw, featuring of the most famous maps from the collection of the National Library of Scotland, will appeal to jigsaw fans of all ages and abilities. The map has plenty of detail of the Scottish mainland and islands, and also includes vignettes of historical figures – James VI and I; his wife, Anne of Denmark; Henry, Prince of Wales; and Charles, Duke of York.

The map was created by John Speed (1552–1629), known after his death 'the English Mercator', was one of the best-known mapmakers of his time, and also a noted historian. His atlas The Theatre of the Empire of Great Britain (1612) is his most well-known work, which he produced to accompany his monumental History of Great Britain, which was published in 1611.

A great gift idea for your favourite Scot, which just may be you!

Capturing Scotland's changing historic places

Climate Change Scientist David Harkin explores six stunning images of Scotland's historic environment and the climate change stories behind them.

From towering lighthouses to quaint coastal cottages, photography has captured many beautiful moments across Scotland's historic environment.

But, taken over time, photography can also show how the changing climate is impacting Scotland's heritage. Because it's happening gradually, the effects of climate change can be difficult to show in a snapshot. And imagining how things will change even more in the future can be a challenge. With that in mind, Historic Environment Scotland's (HES) Climate Change Scientist David Harkin explores six stunning images of Scotland's historic environment and the climate change stories behind them.

buildings like this. In fact, our historic environment can be 'old' but still play a crucial role in society today, like this operational lighthouse.

Eilean Glas Lighthouse can be found on the island of Scalpay in the Outer Hebrides. It was first lit on 10 October 1789, and the site has continued to operate to the present day.

Sadly, coastal sites like this are often more vulnerable to the impacts of climate change. They're at risk from changes to the marine and land environments, like coastal erosion, more extreme weather events and changing patterns in decay in their building fabric.

country, they have been built with their turbulent climates in mind – there is a pattern of dwellings being built with their gable-end to the sea. There are many reasons for this but one linked to climate resilience is that a gable-end is the strongest face of a building, and most resilient against incoming wind and rain. Cleverly positioning buildings like these has worked well in the past, but the changes we are seeing in our climate now may put them at risk. This is particularly true for changes in weather extremes.

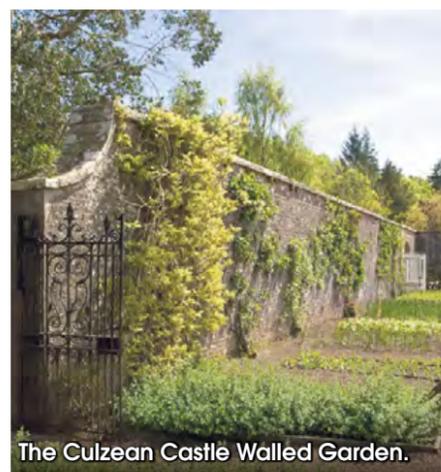

Slate is great

Beautiful Easdale

As a geologist, this image speaks to me! It's an aerial shot of Easdale, a small island off the west coast. Once the centre of the slate industry in Scotland, material extracted here has roofed buildings around the world. In this photo, you can see the old quarries now filled with water quite clearly. Here we can see how many coastal communities can be vulnerable to impacts from sea-level rise and more frequent coastal flooding. In saying this, it is often the case that coastal communities are the most resilient to these changes as they have evolved and adapted to what can already be a harsh climate.

Historic landscapes

The Culzean Castle Walled Garden.

Scotland's historic environment stretches far beyond buildings – historic landscapes also reveal incredible stories about how people once lived. The Culzean Castle Walled Garden is part of beautifully designed and curated historic landscape, including the castle itself. This was once one of the most innovative gardens in Scotland.

Many parks and historic gardens like this were laid out intentionally for artistic effect. Tree and plant species were often carefully selected, but changes in our climate mean in the future they may no longer be suitable, and new (sometimes invasive species) may take hold changing the look and character of these landscapes.

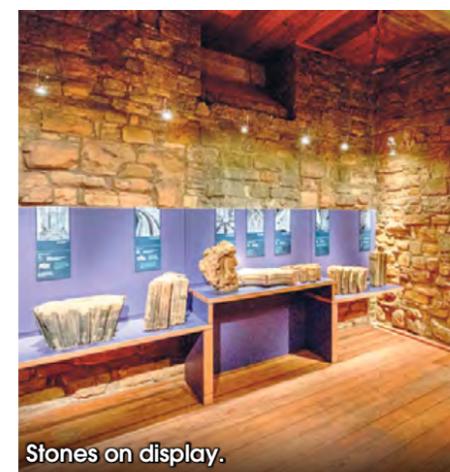

Beneath the surface

The Links of Noltland.

Links of Noltland is an extensive Neolithic farming settlement, and home to Orkney's largest Bronze Age settlement. Over the past few years emergency excavations have been taking place here as a result of the dune system that protected the site for thousands of years breaking down, exposing vulnerable archaeological deposits. The impacts of climate change can exacerbate processes such as those experienced at this site and speed up the loss of vulnerable buried remains that give us unique insight into how prehistoric people lived.

Objects from the past

Stones on display.

For many years, the carved stones of Elgin Cathedral lay buried amidst the ruins. In the 1800s, Elgin shoemaker John Shanks became the first keeper and watchman of the cathedral. When clearing rubble, he discovered many beautiful, intricate carvings. These objects that trace our history are vital in telling Scotland's stories from the past. Changes in our climate can have adverse effects on the preservation of objects like these stones. Warming temperatures and changing rainfall patterns can make it increasingly difficult to control internal temperatures and humidity levels, which in turn can damage vulnerable objects.

Oldest known moving images of Wick saved for posterity

The Wick Kinora Reels are the oldest surviving moving images of Wick, in Caithness, dating approximately 1897-1910.

Following years of detailed and specialised work, the National Library has completed the digitisation, re-animation and careful restoration of footage of Wick from the turn of the 20th century.

The Wick Society gave five Kinora reels to the Library's Moving Image Archive about 20 years ago for protection and preservation. The Kinora was an early moving image device for which individual frames of film were printed onto small cards attached to a circular core.

The reel of cards – like a large round flip-book – was placed in a Kinora viewer and revolved by turning a handle.

Wick Kinora Reels

Deemed to be the work of local photographer John G Humphrey (1868–1949), the 'Wick Kinora Reels' contain scenes and events that are estimated to have taken place between 1897 and 1910. The footage includes ships and tugboats arriving into Wick Harbour, fishermen 'redding' their nets, a storm in Wick Bay, and a church parade – likely marking Queen Victoria's Golden Jubilee in June 1897. Together they provide a unique glimpse of a local industry just before the widespread adoption of mass industrial fishing.

Head of the Moving Image Archive, Alison Stevenson, said: "Kinora reels are tricky to work with. Given their age of about 120 years, they are in a very fragile condition. Our specialists digitised these reels card by card by to reassemble and stabilise the films frame by frame. The paper cards were bent and warped at different rates, so the digital image captured from each one had to be treated individually during restoration. It has been a labour of love. The 'Wick Kinora Reels' are the only Kinora reels in the national collections, and the oldest surviving moving images of Wick. We're excited to finally be able to provide the digitally restored footage to the Wick Society while also making these unique films available online for the public."

Important part of history and heritage

Chairman of the Wick Society, Ian Leith, said: "It was in 1989 that a Kinora Viewer and a collection of reels were gifted to the Wick Society by a Mr and Mrs Sutherland, then resident in East Kilbride. They in turn confirmed that the reels had been the property of Mrs Sutherland's grandfather, Henry Williamson, cousin of William Johnston of the famous Johnston Photographic Collection family. Henry Williamson and the Pulteneytown Good Templars were instrumental in encouraging the first cinema in the town, with Henry acting as projectionist. These reels then, are a most important part of the town's history and heritage and the Wick Society is indebted to the National Library for making their time and expertise available in finally making these scenes from our past available again."

Developed by the Lumière brothers in 1895 (while they were simultaneously inventing the cinematograph), the Kinora was designed to allow people to enjoy short films at home. A Kinora Viewer and the original Wick Kinora Reels remain at the Library's Moving Image Archive at Kelvin Hall in Glasgow.

The digitised footage can be viewed on the Moving Image Archive website; <https://movingimage.nls.uk/film/4627>

Designed in celebration of Chinese New Year and Burns Night both on the 25th of January. Chinese New Year is the most important and widely celebrated festival in the Chinese calendar, whilst Robert Burns Night commemorates Scotland's renowned poet. Festivities take place across the globe to mark both these occasions. The Burns Check, named after Scotland's National Bard, is woven in a new red colourway - a symbolic colour representing joy and happiness in Chinese culture. The Red Red Rose tartan (STA ref: 12659) brings both together to celebrate the historical moment in 2020 when Chinese New Year and Burns Night coincided, the next occasion being the year 2096. This tartan was designed by Lochcarron of Scotland and registered in October, 2019.

Burns at both ends

*Robert Burns published his Poems, Chiefly in the Scottish Dialect in July, 1786, to universal acclaim. Later that year, he set out for Edinburgh to print a second edition. In this excerpt from the newly released historical novella, The Riotous Passions of Robbie Burns, John Ivison imagines the welcome that awaited the young poet in the seat of the Scottish Enlightenment.*

An etching of Burns' Jolly Beggars.
By R. Bryden of Ayr.

From the distance of nearly three decades, I can reminisce about Burns with great fondness. He took me under his wing, taught me how to bend Cupid's bow and held me in the grip of his charming sorcery. He was a bewitching figure — someone once said of him that when you shook hands, it was as if he burnt you. Yet there were occasions where he behaved damnably and persuaded me to be complicit in many of his deceptions. His belief that poets should be governed by different rules of conduct than everyone else inflicted scars that took many years to heal.

It was scarcely surprising that the man inspired mixed emotions — he was a mass of contradictions: capable of beauty and baseness, sensitive to the promise of life but also its many pitfalls, gifted with confidence and accomplishment while crippled with self-doubt. He possessed a rare kindness but cruelty, too. Being in his orbit was exhilarating and exhausting.

Author John Ivison.

The coffin

The night we met was a typical grey Edinburgh evening. I wandered into Johnnie Dowie's tavern and headed to the narrow little room at the back, ominously named "The Coffin." I looked in to see Richmond, Nicol and a third man — part peasant, part dandy — clad in a coat the russet brown colour of dead leaves, his brown hair tied back in a way that was not yet fashionable and with no trace of powder. He had eyes that were clear and strong and probing. The group sat eating oysters and drinking porter while the stranger held court. My friends did not see me, so I let him continue with his story before entering.

"We ranged around a bowl until the good-fellow hour of six and then went out to pay our devotions to the glorious lamp of day," he said. "We saddled up and spent the day passing the bottle as we rode. But then a Highlandman came past us at a gallop on a tolerably good horse that had never known the ornament of iron or leather. We scorned to be out-galloped by a Highlandman, so off we started, whip and spur. My companions fell astern, but my old mare was not called Rocinante for naught. She was as fleet as Don Quixote's horse and strained past the Highlandman in spite of all his efforts with the hair halter. Just as I was passing, Donald wheeled his horse, as if to cross before me to mar my progress. But ere he could, down came his horse and threw his rider's breechless arse into a hedge. Then down came Rocinante and my bardship between her and the Highlandman's horse. Neither horses nor riders came off as badly as might have been expected — just a few cuts and bruises and a thorough resolution to be the pattern of sobriety in the future."

With that he raised his bumper and winked at me as the others howled in laughter.

I entered somewhat red of face for having eaves-dropped, but I need not have worried. When Richmond and Nicol saw me, they rose and ushered me to take a seat.

"Rab, this is the newest recruit to our band of revelry, John Bruce. John, meet the poet laureate and bard-in-chief over the districts and counties of Kyle, Cunningham and Carrick, Robert Burns."

"Too kind, too kind, sir. Mr. Bruce come and join us for some homely fare," the man introduced as Robert Burns said to me.

"Mr. Burns, pleased to make your acquaintance," I said back. "I'd heard you were bound for Jamaica?"

Kilmarnock Edition

"Well my chest of belongings was already on the road to a ship harboured in Greenock when I received word that Dr. Thomas Blacklock, the esteemed blind poet and scholar, held my Kilmarnock Edition in some regard, and that roused my poetic ambition. His idea that I would meet with every encouragement in the capital for a second edition fired me so much that I posted to Edinburgh without a single acquaintance, bar our mutual friend, John Richmond, and not a single letter of introduction in my pocket."

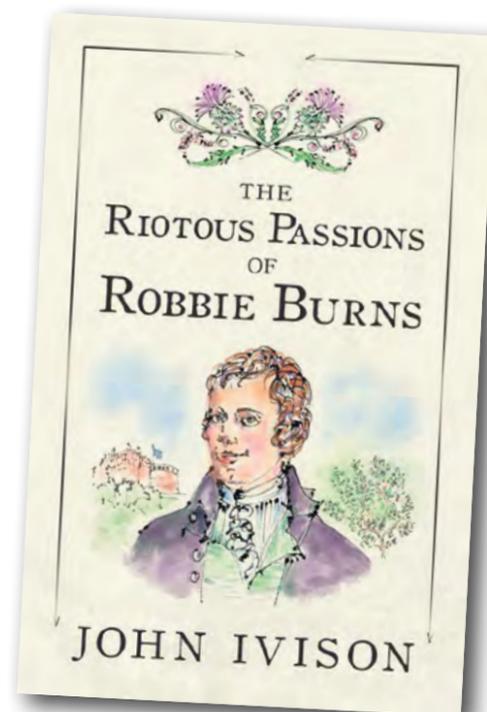

"So, what's next for you?" I asked.

"What's next, my boy, is a trip to Dawnie Douglas' tavern to introduce Mr. Burns to the Crochallan Fencibles," interrupted Nicol.

I'd heard about this club, ostensibly a band of citizens formed as 'fencible men' or volunteers against the dangers arising from invasion. But this was no ordinary fencible club. It was a social gathering, with mock military pretensions, of some of Edinburgh's most eminent citizens, named after an old Gaelic song the proprietor was in the habit of singing to his guests — The Cattle of Colin or Chrochallan.

When the happy triumvirate I had joined had finished eating and drinking, we made our way to a neighbouring close, where a sign read "Anchor Tavern Howff," with a scale stair leading down.

We descended and found a group of men arranged around a long table with three older gentlemen at the head. Nicol was hailed on his entrance to the Crown Room at the back of the tavern by the foremost man, who seemed to be in charge. He returned the greeting. "Colonel Dunbar," said Nicol, "I have brought you two new recruits, including the poet whose star is blazing across our skies, Mr. Robert Burns. Jock Richmond I think you have met, and may I present my kinsman from Annandale, John Bruce."

The Crochallan Fencibles

"Gentlemen, come in and take a seat. Welcome to the Crochallan Fencibles, a body of men who can scarcely discern between right hand or left for drunkenness. I'm William Dunbar, WS. Our military rank is as ludicrous as the threat to our security from the Americas. But we like to add a degree of formality to our revels. To my left is Mr. Charles Hay, our muster-master general, who is charged with drilling the recruits. To my right is our esteemed founder and sergeant-at-arms, Mr. William Smellie," he said, pointing to a man in mid-life who, having apparently grown careless of his costume and appearance, had a shabby coat, grisly growth on his chin and uncombed locks.

"You will meet the other members in due course: Mr. Cleghorn, Mr. Cunningham, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Masterton, Mr. Hill and Mr. Gordon. But a question first, Mr. Burns — are you a lover of the ladies?"

Burns stepped forward into the light and thought for a minute. "Sir, I am the greatest fool when woman is the presiding star. So much so that I am honouring my king by begetting him loyal subjects," he said to a murmur of general satisfaction from the membership.

"Well said, sir," replied Dunbar. "Then you will join us in saving the ladies. The rules to the game are simple. Each man has to propose his own girl as the loveliest of her sex, drink to her glory and vow to die in her defence. The one who drinks most and falls prone last is the victor."

At this point bumpers were raised, toasts made and Smellie rose unsteadily to his feet before launching into a chorus:

"Come rede me, dame, come tell me, dame, My dame come tell me truly, What length o' graith, when weel ca'd hame, Will sair a woman duly?"

The carlin clew her wanton tail, Her wanton tail sae ready,

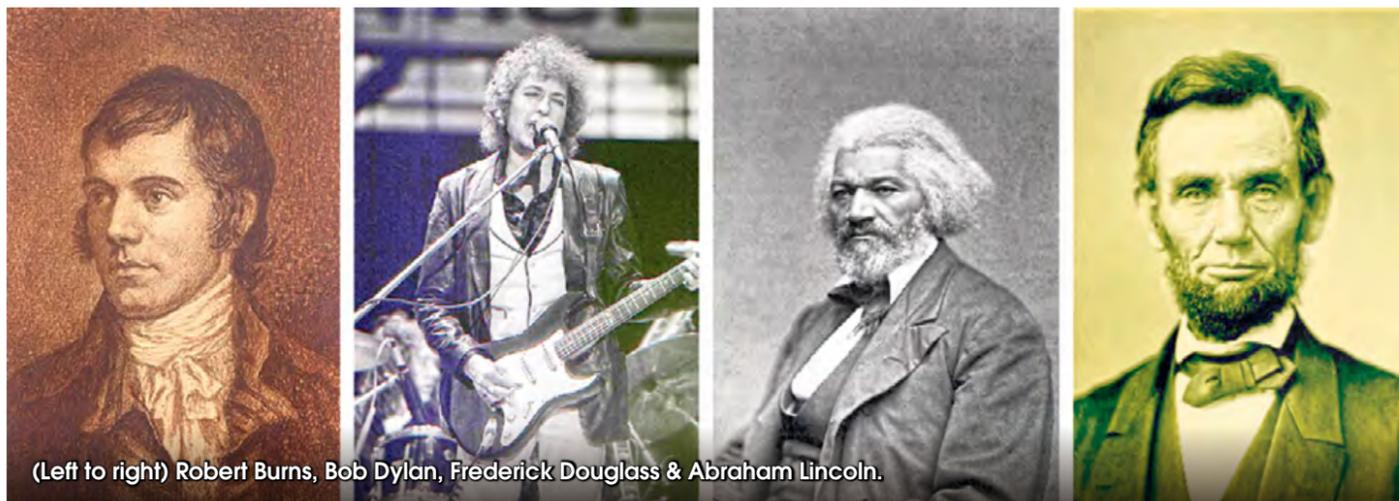

I learn'd a sang in Annandale
Nine inch will please a lady."

The Crochallan Fencibles had been called to arms.

Robert Burns then and now: Inspiring creative minds for centuries

The legacy of Robert Burns is unlike any other and, hundreds of years later, his work is still inspiring the current generation of creatives in ways he never could have imagined. The awareness and popularity of Robert Burns on a global scale is so huge that you'd be forgiven for thinking of him as a mythical creature – such is his unmatched legacy. While the world has been blessed with some truly great writers and poets, few are celebrated in the same way as Scotland's national bard. Not even the great William Shakespeare has an entire day dedicated to him, but our Rabbin does!

While not everyone will know that he's responsible for its creation, you'll be hard pushed to find anyone who hasn't sung a few lines of Auld Lang Syne, his ode to eternal friendship, with the song even featuring in some of Hollywood's biggest movies. Yes, like a fine wine – or in our case, a fine whisky – Robert Burns seems only to get better with age.

For a' that

Since his death in 1796, Burns has maintained a firm grip on the consciousness of creative minds both within Scotland and further afield. Regarded as a pioneer of the 'Romantic movement', Burns' emotionally charged verses that centred on the natural world inspired greats like Wordsworth, Coleridge and Sir Walter Scott. Fast forward to the modern era and his impact is still keenly felt in the works of artists like Bob Dylan, who famously stated that Burns' A Red, Red Rose was his greatest creative inspiration.

As well as this, Burns was also very politically minded. True to the ideals that Scotland holds just as strongly today through some of our world-leading initiatives, Burns' Is There for Honest

Poverty, is famous for its strong views on equality for everyone. It's this firm belief that led to him becoming a great source of inspiration for both slavery abolitionist, Frederick Douglass and President Abraham Lincoln. Douglass frequently quoted Burns as he campaigned for the abolition of slavery, and Lincoln was known to be able to recite entire Burns poems from heart.

For a man so in touch with his emotions and his own sense of right and wrong, it's easy to see why Burns is so highly regarded – that he had quite the way with words is just the icing on the cake. It's understandable then, that the current generation of Scots are still influenced by Burns' work, creating completely new and exciting products.

Bringing Robert Burns' words to life in a new way

Based in Gourock, just 50 miles north of Burns' hometown, Craig Black is a world-renowned designer, lettering artist and typographer. Known for his bespoke and innovative murals and installations, Craig's work has been displayed everywhere from London to Sydney, Barcelona and Dubai. When he isn't developing jaw-dropping works of art, Craig is also co-founder and Creative Director of Creative Inverclyde, a social enterprise dedicated to using the creative industries to foster positive social change across Scotland.

Recently, Craig was asked to turn his considerable skills to the subject of Robert Burns, creating a striking mural celebrating Burns' cultural legacy which is now proudly displayed in his home region of Ayrshire. Craig was keen to use his own unique style to encapsulate Burns' iconic creative genius, but what was it about Burns specifically that helped inspire his stunning design?

Craig said: "When creating the mural, I wanted to make sure it was eye-catching from a distance as well as capturing intriguing little details that you need to inspect closely, such as the wee mouse on top of the letter 'T'. This makes the viewer engage more deeply into the work, very much like Robert Burns did with his poetry".

Craig also points out that, as a fellow Scot, just getting to follow in the footsteps of Burns is incredibly inspiring in and of itself. He is amazed by Burns' legacy in Scotland, and the rest of the world, and hopes one day that his own incredible work will leave an impact on Scotland in a way similar to the poet.

Like the legendary figures of Douglass and Lincoln before him, Craig admits that Is There for Honest Poverty is one of his favourite Burns poems; mainly because it represents his own belief that people need to come together to create a better world. This shared philosophy is evident in the amazing work that Craig and the team do at Creative Inverclyde – using the arts to drive positive social change. Craig is also very quick to appreciate why Burns was so inspired by the land around him, pointing out that it is hard not to be moved by Scotland's natural beauty.

He said: "I've been very fortunate to be able to travel the world and see some truly incredible places but nothing beats the beauty of Scotland. The lands and views are truly stunning and what I love most is how accessible it is from cities to beautiful rural places across our country. My home studio is literally 100 yards from the water and every morning I wake up and see the beautiful views, it's honestly breath-taking".

Home of the official Robert Burns Whisky

The Isle of Arran Distillers are an independently owned and operated whisky company on, you guessed it, the Isle of Arran. Perfectly described by those who visit it as 'Scotland in miniature' Arran sits on Scotland's west coast, just a short ferry trip from the mainland. It's here, at their Lochranza distillery in the north of the island, that the world's only officially endorsed Robert Burns Malt Whisky is produced.

The distillery also acts as a patron of the Robert Burns World Federation, which plays a large role in ensuring that the works of Scotland's national poet are remembered and enjoyed around the globe. Founded in 1885, the federation is the oldest national literary association in Scotland. Today, the federation boasts more than 250 member clubs from countries all around the world and continues its mission to bring the life and works of Burns to as many people as possible.

So, what was it about Burns that inspired the Isle of Arran Distillers to create their very own range of whiskies dedicated to the great man? Simply put, they were inspired by how fondly Burns spoke of the land around him, and wanted to use the ingredients from the same land to create a whisky that even the man himself would have been proud to taste.

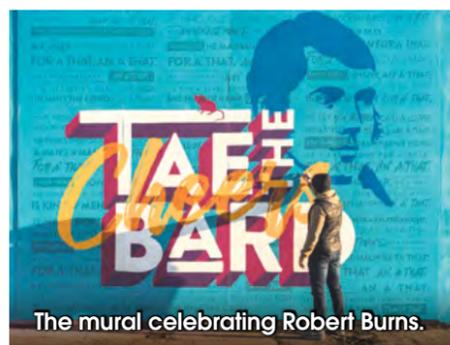

A representative from Arran Distillers said: "As the distillery closest to where Robert Burns was born, we were a natural partner for the Robert Burns World Federation and we've worked together since 1998.

Burns worked as a customs officer in the region and probably would have been familiar with the illicit whisky stills on the Isle of Arran back in his time. We like to think he would have enjoyed seeing our company bring legal whisky production back to his region.

We have always been very proud of being an independently owned Scottish company that puts quality right at the forefront of everything we do. Burns' creativity and enthusiasm for the country of his birth really resonates with us and we are in the fortunate position to be able to take our product worldwide to spread the knowledge of not just our whisky but also our heritage and Burns himself".

Where the Grey Friars prayed

Greyfriars Kirk.

Greyfriars Bobby is probably history's most famous Skye Terrier. His owner, an Edinburgh night watchman called John Gray, died in 1858 and was buried in Greyfriars Kirkyard. The dog is famously said to have guarded his master's grave for 14 years during which time he was cared for by the people of Edinburgh. When he died in 1872 he was buried near his master, and a statue (of the dog, not the master) commissioned and raised. Bobby's statue is still a popular tourist attraction. Where Candlemaker Row emerges onto George IV Bridge, across from Chambers Street (the home of the National Museum), he stands proudly, nose ever shiny from visitors who give it a rub for luck. A novelised version of his story was published in 1912 and there have been two film versions.

There are some who find the Greyfriars Bobby industry a bit over-sentimental and who wish we focused on more substantial aspects of our history. I see their point. And Greyfriars Kirkyard, the scene of the melodrama, deserves our attention for many other reasons.

Memorial to George Buchanan.

Grey Friars

The 'Grey Friars' name comes from the colour of the garments worn by the Franciscan order. A Franciscan community was based near here from the 1450s until the Reformation. None of its structures survive, but what is now the Kirkyard is believed to have been part of the community's gardens. After the defeat to the English at the Battle of Flodden in 1513, defensive wall was built, making use of earlier defences, to protect the city from the expected invasion. The invasion did not come but the defences became known as the Flodden Wall. The most impressive surviving portion of it runs through the Kirkyard. The Greyfriars monastery was just inside the wall.

The 'Grey Friars' name comes from the colour of the garments worn by the Franciscan order.

The use of the site as a burial ground dates from the late 1500s and predates the building of the present Greyfriars Kirk. The kirk was the first post-Reformation church to be built in Edinburgh; it took a while, work beginning in 1602 and not completed until 1620. The church has been much altered and added to since.

The 1630s and 1640s were a time of great political and ecclesiastical turmoil in Scotland and throughout the islands of Britain and Ireland. Charles I had tried to impose Episcopalian styles of worship on the Scottish church and the descent to civil war began in 1638 when those who opposed Charles' reforms signed the National Covenant. This signing took place in Greyfriars Kirk.

Decades on those later Covenanters who still resisted royal or government interference in church affairs would make an unwelcome return to Greyfriars. After many were captured following the 1679 Battle of Bothwell Bridge, the Kirkyard was used as their prison. The area signposted today as 'Covenanter's Prison' is speculative; probably a much larger area was necessary. Sir George Mackenzie of Rosehaugh is remembered as a judge who dealt particularly harshly with any Covenanters who came before him. Ironically, after his death in 1691, he was interred in a mausoleum in Greyfriars Kirkyard. In later years there were stories that he was one of the many ghosts who haunted Greyfriars. Robert Louis Stevenson recalled how young boys dared each other to visit the tomb of 'Bloody Mackenzie' after dark. Mackenzie could not have been all bad; in 1680 he helped create the Library of the Faculty of Advocates - the forerunner of the National Library of Scotland.

At the opposite end of the Kirkyard from Mackenzie's now rather derelict mausoleum is the Covenanter Memorial. Erected in 1771, it commemorates those Covenanters who died in the reign of Charles II. Over the centuries, the Kirkyard has amassed a number of other remarkable burials, some of the most prominent being listed on a sign near the entrance. One of the first to be laid to rest here was George Buchanan (1506-82) a scholar, academic and Reformation figure who is perhaps best-known for being tutor to the young James VI. He once had to flee pre-Reformation Scotland after writing a satirical poem about the Franciscan order - yet now he lies in their former turf, though it is not certain where. The impressive memorial to him is a 19th century affair.

The world's most haunted graveyard

Two famous poets rest in Greyfriars; Duncan Ban Macintyre (1724-1812) is perhaps the most celebrated of all Scots Gaelic poets. He is particularly associated with his birthplace of Glenorchy, and the soaring peak of Beinn Dorain which he celebrated in verse. He lived in Edinburgh for much of his life, serving in the City Guard. Known as 'Fair Duncan of the Songs', he remained illiterate his entire life. A stone was raised to him in Greyfriars Kirkyard some years after he was buried there. He also has a monument near Dalmally.

The other poet buried in Greyfriars is better-known - William McGonagall. Famous as a resident of Dundee, McGonagall actually lived in Edinburgh for much of his life. At his death he was granted only a pauper's funeral and burial, but a memorial was raised in the Kirkyard in 1999. Harry Potter fans speculate that Edinburgh resident JK Rowling must have named her Professor McGonagall novel after seeing this memorial, but it wasn't in situ until after she had started publishing the books. However, the theory is fuelled by other lesser-known graves in the Kirkyard bearing names now familiar to Potter fans - there is even a Potter.

Monument to Duncan Ban Macintyre.

Whatever the truth, the Kirkyard is very much on the radar for Potter enthusiasts.

Of course, Greyfriars is in Edinburgh, a city once infamous for grave-robbers who provided research materials for the city's surgeons, Burke and Hare being the best-known. Near the Kirk you can see some graves with mortsafes - cages of iron over the burial places designed to prevent the occupants being removed. It is also said that the small building near the entrance - now known as Bobby's Bothy - was used by family members to guard new graves. The bothy is now the headquarters of a company that runs tours of haunted sites - including here.

Yes, Greyfriars Kirkyard has been called 'the world's most haunted graveyard', but I have never experienced anything unusual, so do not avoid it on that account. It is definitely haunted by religious and political history, battles and poetry, memory and loss. It is well worth a visit whether or not you're interested in Greyfriars Bobby.

IN SCOTLAND TODAY

30% of Scotland's land to be protected for nature

Plans to protect at least 30% of Scotland's land for nature by 2030 – and to examine options to extend this further – have been announced by Environment Secretary Roseanna Cunningham. The proposals were published in a new 'Statement of Intent on Biodiversity' which sets out the Scottish Government's priorities for tackling biodiversity loss as part of a twin-crises approach to ending our contribution to climate change and ecological decline. Currently, 37% of Scotland's marine environment receives protection with 22.7% of terrestrial land protected for nature. The Statement commits to increasing protection on land to 30% by 2030 and examining options to extend this even further.

The announcement comes ahead of the publication of the Scottish Government's Climate Change Plan update very shortly, with nature-based solutions to climate challenge expected to form a key part of the update. Restoring peatland and woodland creation will be at the heart of the proposals and are supported by an additional £500 million of previously committed investment in our natural economy.

Ms Cunningham launched the Statement at a summit convened to discuss the enormous opportunities in restoring Scotland's peatland areas and how to make this happen at the scale required. Other commitments in the document include plans to support new, locally driven projects that aim to improve ecological connectivity, endorsing the 'Leaders' Pledge for Nature' presented at this year's United Nations General Assembly, and developing a new national strategy on biodiversity.

NatureScot Chief Executive Francesca Osowska said: "We need nature for our survival – but our nature is in crisis. We have to work quickly and at a scale not seen before. These plans are an excellent step to transforming how we interact with, and care for, nature in every aspect of our lives."

Dame Judi Dench dedicates woodland in the north of Scotland

Dame Judi Dench has dedicated a grove at Woodland Trust's Ledmore and Migdale Wood in Sutherland: "for the people we love." A post marking the grove has recently been erected, after Dame Judi sent out cards last Christmas telling friends she was dedicating the acre of woodland to them. Dame Judi said: "For many years it has been my habit to plant trees marking occasions in family life. When I saw the Woodland Trust's dedication scheme it struck me as a marvellous way of gifting something rather beautiful and lasting to friends at Christmas. I looked at information and pictures of various beautiful woods before settling on Ledmore and Migdale. I have not visited personally. Perhaps I shall one day. As the trees grow in the years ahead it is certainly a nice thought that some of my friends might drop by. It does seem a magical spot."

Ledmore and Migdale offers an enriching and magical experience to visitors looking for fantastic walks, a vast array of wildlife, tranquillity. The pandemic crisis delayed installation of a dedication post at the wood, but it is now in place. It reads: "These trees have been dedicated at Christmas 2019 for the people we love. Judi Dench and family."

One of Britain's most respected film, stage and television actresses, Dame Judi has worked for the National Theatre Company and the Royal Shakespeare Company and won no fewer than eight prestigious Olivier Awards. Known internationally for roles in films including James Bond, Mrs Brown, Shakespeare in Love and Iris, she is an ambassador of the Woodland Trust.

Woodland Trust Scotland site manager Ross Watson said: "This is a fantastic accolade for Ledmore and Migdale. I am thrilled and I am sure many in the local community will be delighted too. The grove comprises an open bog woodland with birch fringe, and spectacular views over to Migdale Rock. It will be a fantastic haven for wildlife as the area continues to develop in the years ahead."

Underwater tube link from Scotland to Northern Ireland being considered

Scotland and Northern Ireland could be linked with an innovative floating tube bridge, researchers at Heriot-Watt

University have said. The alternative to a land bridge would see traffic cross between the two islands around 50 metres below the water and differs from Prime Minister Boris Johnson's 20-mile bridge across the North Channel of the Irish Sea.

The submerged floating tube bridge concept "has the potential to transform how long-distance sea crossings are tackled", project member Eoin MacDonald has said. The £15bn tube tunnel would be anchored to the sea bed and attached to floating pontoons on the surface. The cost, practicality and demand for a bridge between Scotland and Northern Ireland is currently being considered by a UK government study.

Kickstart for video game to bring Medieval Aberdeen to life

A Kickstarter campaign to create a video game which will bring people face-to-face with life in the Middle Ages has been launched. The game, called Strange Sickness, is based on Aberdeen's world-recognised Burgh Records, which offer such a unique insight into the medieval town that they were awarded UNESCO status for their historical importance. Over recent years, historians from the University of Aberdeen have led projects to delve deeper than ever before into the documents, which cover the period 1398-1511.

This has led to finds such as the earliest reference in Scotland to a still for the production of aquavite, the spirit that became known as whisky, and created a digital transcription called the Aberdeen Registers Online: 1398-1511.

Medieval life in Europe has long influenced creative media from Lord of the Rings to Game of Thrones and the Burgh Records are also uniquely placed to offer insights into how the city's residents dealt with the threat of the plague.

Dr William Hepburn, a Historical Research Fellow at the University of Aberdeen, who is leading the crowd-funding campaign for Strange Sickness, says understanding the fear our predecessors must have felt is one of the key aspects of the project.

"Video games are an amazing tool to help people imagine the past, and even become historians themselves by using original records," he said. "Even in times when there were not outbreaks of the plague in the town, fears about the disease arriving from elsewhere are clear to see in the many steps Aberdeen took to prevent infection. It's a parallel that we can all understand more readily in today's climate. The game allows players to immerse themselves in Aberdeen's history, interact with characters from medieval society and make decisions which will shape their own story."

Robert Burns

outraged by the thought of it and the story of Burke and Hare and the hideous crimes they committed as grave-robbers (and murderers) was hot news.

Phrenology

But phrenology was also still popular and advocates of the pseudo-science were doing all they could, by fair means or foul, to secure access to the skulls of all of Scotland's interesting and important figures of history. Burns was a prime target. He had died of rheumatic heart disease at his home in Dumfries in July 1796, aged just 37. His funeral took place on the same day his fifth surviving child, Maxwell, was born (Burns had 12 children by four women - nine by his wife Jean Armour). He was buried in the far corner of St. Michael's Churchyard in Dumfries; a simple "slab of freestone" being all his wife, Jean Armour, could afford. But in the years that followed a fund-raising effort began and in 1815 his body was moved to a grand mausoleum in an area of the graveyard containing the last resting places of respected members of society.

Archaeologist Douglas Speirs takes up the story: "Phrenologist and the editor of the Dumfries Courier newspaper, John McDiarmid, had long lamented that the opportunity had not been seized in 1815, when Burns was exhumed and translated to his mausoleum, to make an examination of his skull (McDiarmid moved to Dumfries in 1817, had he been around in 1815, then no doubt he would have acted then). With Jean dead, there was a chance of getting to the Bard. Contemporary newspapers report that permission was given by Jean's brother, Robert Armour, to access the skull for research but it's deeply questionable what consent, if any, was really given. It's abundantly clear that what took place was essentially unconsented grave-robbing tidied up in the local newspaper with a bit of fake news."

The group was led on the night by Archibald Blacklock, aided by John McDiarmid and four others. The gang made their way secretly and separately to meet at 7pm at Burns' mausoleum. But when they got to the graveyard, there were too many people about so they dispersed, agreeing to meet back at the tomb later that night at 9pm. Sunset was about 8.30pm so it had just got dark by the time they reconvened at the tomb with a ladder and a 'muffled lantern'. They were in possession of the keys to the gate of the mausoleum, having been given them the day before to assist with the burial of Jean Armour.

Mr Speirs says: "One of the gang kept a lookout whilst the rest opened the gate, entered the small mausoleum, lifted the floor slabs covering the vault below and descended into the vault using the ladder and lantern. The coffin casket was opened and Archibald Blacklock, the surgeon ring-leader and the team's 'man of science' and phrenologist, made an assessment of the skull in the vault, explaining the features to his companions."

Skull-cast

The details of what happened next are not reported but it's clear that the party quickly vacated the tomb with the skull in their possession, making their way to nearby Queensberry Street in Dumfries and the workshop of local plasterer, James Fraser.

At the time Burns' mausoleum was raided, grave robbing was the talk, and the scourge of Scotland.

At the workshop, the gang were joined by the plasterer and by senior figures from the town council including the Chief Magistrate and the Dean of Guild and rector of Dumfries Academy.

Mr Speirs says: "The party probably arrived at Fraser's workshop around 10pm. Blacklock states that they left at 1am in the morning. In the intervening time, they cleaned the skull, watched as Fraser formed a mould around it to make an imprint, then took a plaster cast from the mould. They also all marvelled at the great size of the skull. Of the ten men present, it is recorded by Blacklock that they all tried their hats on the poet's skull."

The skull-cast was sent the next day to the famous Edinburgh phrenologist, George Coombe. Archibald Blacklock records that the same day: "Having completed our intention, the skull, securely enclosed in a leaden case, was again committed to the earth precisely where we found it." But no details of when or how the skull was returned to the mausoleum are recorded.

Coombe, a former lawyer, was delighted to receive the skull and within a month published his findings. He wrote: "The skull indicates the combination of strong animal passions, with equally powerful moral emotions....The combination... bespeaks a mind extremely subject to contending emotions - capable of great good or great evil...No phrenologist can look upon this head, and consider the circumstances in which Burns was placed, without vivid feelings of regret. Burns must have walked the earth with a consciousness of great superiority over his associates in the station in which he was placed—of powers calculated for a far higher sphere than that which he was able to reach—and of passions which he could with difficulty restrain, and which it was fatal to indulge. If he had been placed from infancy in the higher ranks of life, liberally educated, and employed in pursuits corresponding to his powers, the inferior portion of his nature would have lost part of its energy, while his better qualities would have assumed a decided and permanent superiority."

Because of the apparent permission the gang had received and the secretive backing of the great and good, they were never arrested or charged. But copies of the cast of the skull were made and are still studied today.

The great and the good had gathered in Dumfries for the funeral of Jean Armour, the beloved but sometimes harshly treated wife of national bard Robbie Burns. The 82-year-old had died nearly 40 years after her famous husband and was due to be laid to rest next to him in an ornate mausoleum at the historic St Michael's Kirkyard. But there was a group among the crowd who were not there to pay their respects to the venerated old lady, they had a far more sinister reason to be at the burial site.

Local surgeon Archibald Blacklock and five co-conspirators were there to break into the lair, remove Burns' head so that a plaster cast could be made and then return the stolen skull. The shocking events on the night of on the night of March 31, 1834 were carried out to further the study of phrenology, a discredited but still followed theory that the bumps of the skull reveal the character of the person. At the time Burns' mausoleum was raided, grave robbing was the talk, and the scourge of Scotland. The public was horrified and

Scotland reveals new national visitor attraction opening in 2021 for the globally acclaimed Great Tapestry of Scotland

Through the Tapestry and other significant visiting exhibits, the new interactive centre will tell the inspirational true story of Scotland's history, heritage and culture.

A new visitor attraction housing the globally acclaimed Great Tapestry of Scotland will open in spring 2021 in Scotland's premier textile region, the Scottish Borders. The £6.7 million purpose-built facility and interactive exhibition space will bring the best of Scotland's world renowned storytelling to life through the Tapestry's wonderful textile artistry and a range of other significant visiting exhibits.

The vision of one of the world's most prolific and best-loved authors Alexander McCall Smith, designed by historian Alistair Moffat and artist Andrew Crummy, and championed by a team of 1,000 women from across Scotland, the Great Tapestry of Scotland tells the inspirational true story of the country's history, heritage and culture (from 8500 BC to present day). It is made up of 160 panels and 300 miles of wool (enough to lay the entire length of Scotland from the Border with England to the tip of the Shetland in the North Atlantic) - making it one of the largest tapestries ever created.

The work of the Scottish people

The Tapestry is truly the work of the Scottish people, as it was handstitched by thousands of women, men and children (age four to 92) in communities across Scotland and transported by land, sea and air to come together in the town of Galashiels, recently voted the happiest place to live in Scotland. It previously toured Scotland to great acclaim from visitors from every corner of the globe.

The new visitor attraction will be led by newly appointed Great Tapestry of Scotland Centre Director, entrepreneur Sandy Maxwell-Forbes. Sandy is part of Live Borders, a charity managing cultural and leisure attractions across the Scottish Borders and operators of this major addition to the Scottish tourism sector. Live Borders is working in partnership with Scottish Borders Council and the Tapestry Trustees to bring this new attraction to fruition.

“The Great Tapestry of Scotland will not only create a national destination visitor attraction and significant cultural facility in the Borders in 2021, it will also play a key role in the regeneration of Galashiels.”

Speaking on her appointment, Sandy Maxwell-Forbes, Great Tapestry of Scotland Centre Director said: “I'm absolutely delighted to be involved one of the most significant developments for Scottish tourism, heritage and culture in recent years. The Great Tapestry of Scotland is a phenomenal achievement - I was a great fan long before I was appointed. Through the intricate and detailed textile artistry by the creative talents of the army of 1,000 stitchers from across Scotland, this truly is the people's story of Scotland and a triumph of creativity, skill, community and passion. Through the amazing visual story-telling from 8500BC to present day, it makes Scotland's culture, history and heritage accessible to everyone. We frequently hear from those, who like me, have previously seen the Tapestry and long to come back and see it again, so we are delighted that we will be making it possible with our new permanent interactive space. I have also already started some exciting talks about potential visiting exhibits that will be displayed in the centre, and hope to reveal more about these soon.”

A story told with love

One of the Tapestry Trustees, historian Alistair Moffat added: “When I first saw all 160 panels of the tapestry hung together, I was stunned by its immense power as a work of art, its rich colours and narrative drive. I wept at its sheer beauty and majestic telling of the history of our beloved country. The Tapestry is a story told with love – and that is what gives it such power. It is also a story told by 1,000 women whose passion dedication and clever hands made this story so detailed, textured. With the tapestry, women created a new history of our country, very different from the stories previously told by men about men. That is what makes it more than appropriate that the Great Tapestry of Scotland should find its permanent home in Galashiels in the Scottish Borders, the home of our textile industries. It was at the clever hands of women that made the looms in the area rattle and clack. Galashiels and the Scottish Borders may also be seen as a gateway to Scotland, and as such, what could be more welcoming than this beautifully told story of our country that sings with passion and pride?”

The new Great Tapestry of Scotland building, which is currently being constructed by Scottish contractor Ogilvie Constriction, has been designed by one of Scotland's leading architectural practices, Page\Park. The contractors will also repurpose the adjacent former Post Office, a B-listed building with exterior carvings by the once world-renowned 19th century sculptor George Paterson Sutherland, who hailed from the town and later emigrated to Toronto. There will also be retail, café, educational and touring exhibition space, as well as an ongoing events and exhibitions programme.

Significant cultural facility

Experts predict that the centre – a short train ride from Scotland's capital city of Edinburgh on the Borders Railway - will attract over 50,000 visitors to Galashiels each year once opened. Almost £900,000 of extra spending per year is predicted for the local economy, providing 12,000 extra visits to complementary attractions.

Scottish Borders Council's Executive Member for Business and Economic Development, Councillor Mark Rowley said: “The Great Tapestry of Scotland will not only create a national destination visitor attraction and significant cultural facility in the Borders in 2021, it will also play a key role in the regeneration of Galashiels.”

The Great Tapestry of Scotland visitor attraction is central to plans to regenerate Galashiels, alongside a number of other projects which will provide a host of benefits for the town and the Scottish Borders.

Did you know? Great Tapestry of Scotland

- The Great Tapestry of Scotland was the brainchild of one of the world's best-loved writers, Alexander McCall Smith. The 44 Scotland Street author, together with historian Alistair Moffat, and with the artistic talents of Andrew Crummy formed a team set to produce the world's longest tapestries through one of the biggest community arts projects ever to take place in Scotland.
- It is a unique project to stitch the entire story of Scotland from pre-history to modern times.
- It has been hand stitched by over 1000 people in communities across Scotland and transported by land, sea and air to come together in its final permanent home in Galashiels, the Scottish Borders.
- It took over 65,000 hours of stitching and over 300 miles of wool (enough to lay the entire length of Scotland from the Border with England to the tip of the Shetland Isles in the North Atlantic).
- It features 420 million years of Scottish history from 8500BC to present day.
- Through its wonderful textile artistry and visual storytelling, it makes Scotland's history, heritage and culture accessible to all.
- The project took over two years to complete and the finished tapestry toured Scotland from September 2013.
- The textile industry in the Borders stretches as far back as the 13th century. Visitors can learn more about the Borders textile history at Borders Textile Towerhouse, Hawick. Or by following the Textile Trail - a trail involving ten different textile companies in the Borders, celebrating the wonderful tweed and knitwear industry.

IN THE SCOTTISH KITCHEN

Cock-a-leekie soup

Ingredients:

1 x 1.5kg/3lb 5oz ready-to-cook chicken
 2 litres/3½ pints chicken stock (or water)
 3 bay leaves
 4 leeks, halved lengthways, thinly shredded
 2 carrots, peeled, halved lengthways, thinly sliced
 2 sticks celery, halved lengthways, sliced
 12 ready-to-eat dried prunes, shredded salt and freshly ground black pepper

Method:

Sit the chicken in a large saucepan so it fits snugly and add the stock; you need enough to cover the chicken.
 Add the bay and season with salt and pepper. Bring to the boil on a high heat. Cover and simmer for 1–1¼ hours, or until cooked through. Remove the chicken from the liquid and check the juices run clear with no trace of pink when the thickest part of the leg, between the drumstick and the thigh, is pierced with a skewer (if not, cook for a little longer). Pull it apart slightly so it cools quickly.
 Add the leeks, carrots, celery and prunes to the cooking liquid (if you used water, add a couple of chicken stock cubes at this stage).
 Bring to the boil, then cover and cook for 20 minutes, or until the vegetables are tender.
 Pull the meat from the chicken carcass into bite-sized pieces, discarding any skin and bone. Remove the bay leaves from the pan, add a little salt and pepper if needed, return the chicken to the pan and stir. Heat until piping hot. Serve in warmed bowls or mugs.

Bannock

Ingredients:

1 x 7g sachet fast-action yeast
 1 tsp caster sugar
 500g/1lb 2oz. strong white flour
 125g/4½oz. unsalted butter, melted
 250g/9oz. dried mixed fruit
 50g/2oz. light muscovado sugar beaten egg, for glazing

Method:

Mix together the yeast, caster sugar and 250ml/9fl oz lukewarm water in a large bowl. Leave to stand for 10 minutes until the mixture is frothy.
 Add the flour and butter and mix thoroughly. Tip onto a lightly floured surface and knead for about five minutes to form a smooth elastic dough.
 Place the dough into a clean, lightly oiled bowl and cover with a damp tea towel. Leave to prove in a warm place for about one hour or until doubled in size.
 When the dough has risen, remove the tea towel and punch the dough down. Tip onto a lightly floured surface and knead in the fruit and muscovado sugar until well combined.
 Shape the dough into a round shape and place on a lightly greased baking sheet. Cover again with a damp tea towel and leave to rise in a warm place again for 30 minutes or until it has doubled in size.
 Preheat the oven to 180C/350F/Gas 4.
 Brush the bannock with a little beaten egg to glaze. Bake for 45-50 minutes until risen and a rich brown colour. If the bread is getting too dark, cover lightly with parchment paper or foil. When the bread is ready it should sound hollow when the underneath is tapped gently.
 Leave to cool slightly before slicing and serving warm with plenty of butter.

Burns Night Recipes

*Fair fa' your honest, sonsie face,
 Great chieftain o' the pudding-race!*

The Burns Supper on January 25th is an institution of Scottish life: a night to celebrate the life and works of the national Bard. Suppers can range from an informal gathering of friends to a huge, formal dinner full of pomp and circumstance, enjoy!

Haggis, neeps and tatties

Ingredients:

400g/15 oz. of haggis from a good quality butcher (preferably Scottish butcher)
 4 baking potatoes
 50g/2 oz. butter
 50g/2 oz. cream
 1 turnip
 8 shallots
 1 sprig of thyme
 3 cloves of garlic
 50g/2 oz. of sugar
 salt
 200ml/ 7 oz. of red wine
 80ml/3 oz. of port
 500ml/17 oz. of brown chicken stock
 10ml/.5 oz of whisky
 200ml/7 oz. of cream

Method:

Scrub the potatoes and bake them whole in the skins in the oven at 180 degrees until cooked. Remove from the oven and scoop out the flesh of the potatoes and pass through a fine sieve or potato ricer. Add in the cream and butter and mix.
 At the same time, peel and dice the turnip and cook in salted water then pass through a fine sieve or potato ricer. Follow the butcher's instructions for the haggis based on size. Use a round metal ring and layer with one third of haggis layer followed by a third of mashed turnip before adding the mashed potatoes to fill the ring.
 To heat put in a medium oven until warm. Make a stock from the port, red wine, sugar, garlic, thyme and salt. Simmer in a pan together with the shallots until tender. Remove the tough outside layer when cooked. Make a whisky sauce with the brown chicken stock and cream before adding the whisky at the end to taste.
 Serve the timbale of haggis with 2 shallots and the whisky sauce.

Shortbread

Ingredients:

125g/4oz butter
 55g/2oz caster sugar, plus extra to finish
 180g/6oz plain flour

Method:

Heat the oven to 190C/375F/Gas 5. Beat the butter and the sugar together until smooth. Stir in the flour to get a smooth paste. Turn on to a work surface and gently roll out until the paste is 1cm/½in thick. Cut into rounds or fingers and place onto a baking tray. Sprinkle with caster sugar and chill in the fridge for 20 minutes. Bake in the oven for 15-20 minutes, or until pale golden-brown. Set aside to cool on a wire rack.

Cranachan

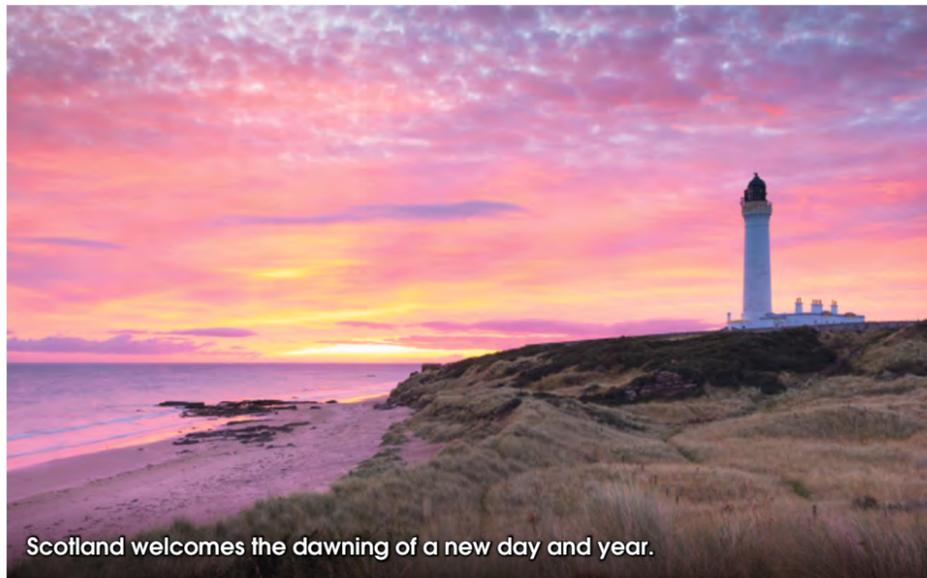

Ingredients:

570ml/1 pint double cream
 85g/3oz. porridge oats
 7 tbsp. whisky
 3 tbsp. honey
 450g/1lb. raspberries
 fresh mint, to garnish

Method:

Toast the oats in a frying pan, being careful not to burn them.
 Lightly whip the cream until it reaches the soft peak stage, then fold in the whisky, honey, oatmeal and raspberries.
 Serve in dessert glasses garnished with a few raspberries and mint.

Scotland looks ahead to 2021

Scotland welcomes the dawning of a new day and year.

Visiting Scotland in 2021 will continue to look a little different. As tourism businesses across Scotland began to reopen their doors from 15th July 2020, many were putting in place protocols to adhere to health and safety guidelines, as well as creating new products and job roles to ensure guests and staff felt comfortable in their surroundings. When travelling around Scotland, visitors should look out for the Good to Go logo which highlights the tourism businesses working hard to adhere to government and public health guidance in order to reopen safely. Now is the time to look ahead to 2021 and discover how Scottish tourism businesses are embracing life as we know it for their guests and the communities they belong to, whilst continuing to offer the warm welcome Scotland is renowned for.

Keep it clean- Scotland's distilleries were perhaps one of the first industries to make a change in the face of the pandemic when they switched up whisky and gin production to make hand sanitiser back in March. Their efforts can still be seen today as their sanitiser can be found in restaurants and bars around the country including from Port of Leith Distillery, Isle of Harris Distillers, Leith Distillery, Pickering's Gin and many more.

Pop-Up Pods- While outdoor dining became the trend of summer 2020, hospitality businesses in Scotland wouldn't let the notoriously unpredictable Scottish weather prevent their guests from tucking in al fresco. Dining pods and marquees have been popping up across the country to ensure guests stay warm, dry and feel safe whilst enjoying a meal with loved ones. Meldrum House in Aberdeenshire has launched the Under The Stars Experience, where guests can dine in atmospheric domes and enjoy a romantic evening admiring Scotland's dark skies. Fonab Castle in Perthshire also introduced Pod Dining with a series of Pods situated in the grounds of the estate with stunning views over Loch Faskally. Each pod provides a relaxing space for eating and drinking with friends and family.

Scotland has you covered- While exploring Scotland, it is essential to wear a face covering in public indoor spaces (e.g. shops, visitor attractions, public transport, restaurants unless seated at your table) to keep people safe. Why not make a fashion statement by choosing a covering designed and produced by some of the talented Scottish textile businesses? Many are offering the latest must-have accessories in a range of fabrics and designs – from Harris Tweed to your family tartan.

Back to nature

Taking the plunge with Immerse Hebrides.

Clean air, stunning vistas and magical moments in nature – travellers are appreciating the health benefits of spending time in the Great Outdoors more than ever before. In Scotland, it could not be easier to follow the call of the wild...

Wild swimming – Why not take the plunge in Scotland? For a small country, Scotland boasts some of the wildest places to swim, from deep lochs to roaring waterfalls and vast sandy beaches. For beginners, guided wild swimming adventures can be a great option to get started (offered by a number of providers across the country, for example Soak Up Skye on the Isle of Skye, SwimWild in the Highlands and Foraging – Scotland's natural larder is truly bountiful and delicious. From berries to wild mushrooms and coastal delights – visitors can find for themselves the ingredients inspiring the menus at some of Scotland's top restaurants by joining foraging experts for an unforgettable culinary adventure. Workshops can be booked with a number of providers, for example Galloway Wild Foods in Dumfries & Galloway and Wildwood Bushcraft in the Highlands.

Stargazing - While Scotland waits for its famous nightlife to return when the time is right, it's time to look to the skies as they put on a spectacular nightly show (weather permitting). Scotland boasts some of the darkest places in Europe, which makes it perfect for stargazing –wrap up warm, look up and enjoy!

Live like a local

Finnieston, Glasgow.

Everything has been a little different in 2020 and the year has been defined by embracing a new way of living. Perhaps 2021 is the year to embrace a new style of holiday and live like a local – either in Scotland's cities or the more rural parts of the country.

Agritourism has gone from strength to strength with holidaymakers looking to get their hands dirty down on the farm. Guests at Arnprior Farm near Stirling or Newton Farm Holidays in Angus can enjoy the freshest produce, from field to fork, experience farming life first-hand and, during lambing season, even help welcome the new arrivals – all while staying in luxurious, modern accommodation.

Equally in cities, 2021 is the year to discover the local favourites from quirky neighbourhoods like Stockbridge in Edinburgh and Finnieston in Glasgow, to stand-alone eateries and independently-owned boutiques in Dundee and Inverness. Now is the time to see the city from a local's perspective, be it the gardens perfect for a picnic in Aberdeen, the family-run record store in Perth or the go-to coffee shop for a morning flat white in Stirling.

2021 is also the year to discover new stories; from the BLM Mural Trail to the Invisible Cities Walking tours, Scotland's cities are showcasing voices that for too long have gone unheard. Art, history, culture, green spaces and mouth-watering food and drink, Scotland's seven cities offer the perfect city break package.

Responsible tourism

The Caledonian Forest.

2021 is the year of renewed tourism, as travellers embrace a new world view. Both visitors and locals love Scotland's stunning natural environments and want to preserve its beauty for generations to come. Everyone can enjoy Scotland responsibly, by spending more time in one destination, using public transport where possible, choosing to stay in environmentally friendly accommodation, visiting off-season and committing to one simple rule: "Leave no trace."

All those who actively seek to make a positive contribution to the environment while on holiday should consider a range of volunteering opportunities in Scotland. Trees for Life offer Conservation Weeks which allow participants to play their part in restoring the ancient Caledonian Forest. And working holidays with The National Trust for Scotland offer the chance to live and work in some of the most remote places of Scotland while making a real difference to the country's natural heritage.

The Picts: A History

New edition of this popular history of the Picts, an ancient nation who ruled most of northern and eastern Scotland during the Dark Ages. Despite their historical importance, they remain shrouded in myth. Absorbed by the kingdom of the Scots in the 9th century, they lost their unique identity, their language and their vibrant artistic culture. It pieces together the evidence to tell the story of this mysterious people from their emergence in Roman times to their eventual disappearance. Price: $24.95 Plus postage

Robert Bruce

The life of Bruce is one of the greatest comeback stories in history. Heir and magnate, shrewd politician, briefly 'king of summer' and then a desperate fugitive who nevertheless returned from exile to recover the kingdom he claimed, Bruce became a gifted military leader and a wise statesman, a leader with vision and energy. This book combines the most up to date scholarship on this crucial figure in the history of the British Isles with explanations & context, so that readers can appreciate Bruce's enormous contribution to the historical impact not just on Scotland, but on England & Ireland too. Price: $29.95 Plus postage

The Well of the Heads: Historical Tales of the Scottish Clans

The origins of the Scottish clans go back over a 1000 years and for centuries these networks of families dominated life in the Scottish Highlands & Islands. The warriors of the clan, fiercely loyal to each other and to their chief, were well known for their courage and military skills. These stories illustrate the dynamism of a society which lived close to nature, had little material wealth but which boasted a remarkable treasure house of stories that were passed down over generations. Price: $24.95 Plus postage

The Makers of Scotland

During the first millennium AD the most northerly part of Britain evolved into the country known as Scotland. The transition was a long process of social & political change driven by the ambitions of powerful warlords. At first these men were tribal chiefs, Roman generals or rulers of small kingdoms. Later the initiative was seized by dynamic warrior-kings. Armies of Picts, Scots, Vikings, Britons and Anglo-Saxons fought each other for supremacy. In this book the remarkable story of how ancient North Britain became the medieval kingdom of Scotland is told. Price: $24.95 Plus postage

Whisky Galore

It's 1943 and the war has brought rationing to the Hebridean islands of Great and Little Todday. When food is in short supply, it is bad enough, but when the whisky runs out, it looks like the end of the world. Morale is at rock bottom. George Campbell needs a wee dram to give him the courage to stand up to his mother and marry Catriona. The priest, the doctor and, of course, the landlord at the inn are all having a very thin time of it. There's no conversation, no jollity, no fun, until a shipwreck off the coast brings a piece of extraordinary good fortune. Price: $24.95 Plus postage

Our Glasgow

This oral history of Glasgow spans most of the last century – a time of economic downturn and eventual renewal, in which the many communities making up the city experienced upheavals that tore some apart and brought others closer together. It tells of the beating heart of no mean city in the words of the people who made it what it is. Their stories will make you laugh and cry. It is people's own memories that make history real and this engrossing book captures them vividly. Price: $29.95 Plus postage

A Life in the Hills: The Katherine Stewart Omnibus

This book gathers A Croft in the Hills with some of Katharine's later books: A Garden in the Hills, describing a year in the life of her Highland garden; A School in the Hills, a vivid history of the school at Abriachan which eventually became the Stewarts' family home; and The Post in the Hills, which tells the dramatic story of the postal service in the Highlands, from the point of view of Katharine's later role as postmistress of the smallest post office in Scotland, run from the porch of her schoolhouse. Price: $34.95 Plus postage

A History of Scotland

Scotland is one of the oldest countries in the world. Yet the stories and figures that dominate Scottish history – tales of failure, submission, thwarted ambition and tragedy – overshadowing the rich tapestry of her intricate past. Historian Neil Oliver presents a compelling portrait of Scottish history, peppered with action, high drama and centuries of turbulence that have helped to shape modern Scotland. He takes in iconic landmarks; debunks myths surrounding Scotland's famous sons; recalls forgotten battles; charts the growth of patriotism; and explores political developments, capturing Scotland's sense of identity and celebrating her place in the wider world. Price: $29.95 Plus postage

The Declaration of Arbroath 1320

The Declaration is one of the most remarkable documents to have been produced anywhere in medieval Europe. Signed by 51 Scottish nobles, it confirms Scotland's status as an independent sovereign state. Quoted by many, understood by few, its historical significance has now almost been overtaken by its mythic status. This is the first book-length study to examine the origins of the Declaration and the ideas upon which it drew, while tracing the rise of its mythic status in Scotland. Price: $24.95 Plus postage

Scottish Battles

Scottish history has been shaped and defined by a series of great battles. John Sadler gives the first full military history of Scotland for many years. From Mons Graupius to Culloden, he shows how terrain and politics shaped the campaigns and decisive engagements we still remember today. This new paperback edition includes detailed battle plans and eyewitness accounts where possible, and sections on the development of warfare – tactics, equipment and styles of fighting. Price: $29.95 Plus postage

Mull and Iona: A Historical Guide

This book provides a history of the islands from the time of their earliest human inhabitants to the present. The gazetteer lists all the places of interest from all periods in the islands' history, from the world-wide renowned churches and graves on Iona and the magnificent restored Duart Castle on Mull, seat of the Clan Maclean, to the planned village of Dervaig, the townships in the Ross of Mull and Ardmeanach which were cleared during the 19th century and more. Price: $24.95 Plus postage

The Secrets of Rosslyn

Nestling in an exquisite glen outside of Edinburgh, Rosslyn Chapel is one of the world's most extraordinary places. 600 years later it continues to confound and intrigue, inspiring stories of The Knights Templar, the Holy Grail and a myriad of esoteric beliefs. This book sifts through mounds of unfounded conjecture and fantasy to make sense of it all and lets the facts speak for themselves, showing ultimately that the truth is no less amazing than fiction. Price: $24.95 Plus postage

The Scottish Baking Bible

Scottish baking is famous the world over. This book introduces a whole range of recipes arranged by theme – Bannocks, Breads and Scones; Biscuits; Tarts and Traybakes; and Cakes and Wee Fancies. From bannocks to butteries, seaweed nibbles to shortbread, from indulgent lemon Madeira cake and light-as-a-feather strawberry sandwich cake to wee fancies such as raspberry buns and 'sair heideis', the book features 40 recipes from all over the country. All are graded according to level of complexity (though none are difficult), making it ideal for bakers of all abilities to explore this glorious part of Scotland's culinary heritage. Price: $14.95 Plus postage

The Lowland Clearances: Scotland's Silent Revolution 1760 – 1830

The Highland Clearances are a well-documented episode in Scotland's past but they were not unique. The process began in the Scottish Lowlands nearly a century before, when tens of thousands of people significantly more than were later exiled from the Highlands. These Clearances shaped the appearance of the Scottish landscape as it is today as they swept aside a traditional way of life. Based on pioneering historical research, this book tells the story of the Lowland Clearances, establishing them as a wider part of the process of Clearance which affected the whole country and changed the face of Scotland forever. Price: $24.95 Plus postage

Made in Scotland

Of the wide range and diversity of British products that are now household names, the Scots can take pride in the fact that many of them began in Scotland. When people first spread Robertson's Golden Shred Marmalade, it was by courtesy of a Paisley man. How would the housewife have thickened her sauce without cornflour, produced in Paisley in 1854? Pringle of Hawick gave the world the first knitted twin-set, these are the stories behind a wide number of the best-known household names that originated in Scotland. Price: $34.95 Plus postage

Tea at Miss Cranston's

Anna Blair recreates a bygone era through the recollections of countless Glaswegians who shared their memories with her during extensive interviews. Nostalgic yet never rose-tinted or bitter, they offer a candid picture of the joys and hardships as well as of the mundane and everyday occurrences of past times. This omnibus edition of her much acclaimed books is a feast of history and together provide a fascinating glimpse into the vibrant and intimate sides of a great city in years gone by. Price: 14.95 Plus postage

The Borders

This is the story of an ancient place; where hunter-gatherers penetrated into the virgin interior, where Celtic warlords ruled, the Romans came but could not conquer, where the glittering kingdom of Northumbria thrived, the place where David MacMalcolm raised great abbeys, where the Border Reivers rode into history, and where Walter Scott sat at Abbotsford and brooded on the areas rich and historic legacy. Price: $29.95 Plus postage

The White Cockade: Historical Tales of the Jacobites

During the first half of the 18th century, Bonnie Prince Charlie and his diehard supporters, the Jacobites, almost changed the course of British history. Their attempts to drive out the house of Hanover and restore the Stuarts to the British throne is one of the great epics of history. This book retells over 40 Jacobite stories which date back to the time of the prince himself and his bitter defeat at the Battle of Culloden. Featuring exploits of real people & events, this book opens a window into a remarkable world and features a huge cast of colourful characters. Price: $24.95 Plus postage

The Unremembered Places: Exploring Scotland's Wild Histories

From the high mountain passes of an ancient droving route to a desolate moorland graveyard, from uninhabited post-industrial islands and Clearance villages to caves explored by early climbers and the mysterious strongholds of Christian missionaries, Patrick Baker makes a series of journeys and encounters Neolithic settlements, bizarre World War Two structures, evidence of illicit whisky production, sacred wells and Viking burial grounds. Combining a rich fusion of travelogue and historical narrative, he threads themes of geology, natural and social history, literature, and industry from the places he visits. Price: $34.95 Plus postage

Everyday Gaelic/w Audio CD

Since English is also spoken in the Gaelic-speaking areas, communication in Gaelic is not so much a matter of necessity as of choice and interest. This book, therefore, covers more than just the phrases needed by an outsider in a foreign land - it also dips into the chatty, the personal and domestic aspects of the language. It ranges from simple words and phrases to the more complex and idiomatic. Includes imitated pronunciation, audio CD improves pronunciation and comprehension. Price: $24.95 book only/$39.95 book & CD Plus postage

William Wallace

Despite Wallace's almost mythical status, boosted in no small part by the film Braveheart, present-day perceptions of him are not always based on the objective analysis of the historical facts. In this revised and expanded biography, Andrew Fisher investigates all the aspects of Wallace's life and character, treating him as a man of his time. The result is a more authentic picture of the greatest of Scotland's heroes than has been previously available. Price: $24.95 Plus postage

Scotland's Last Frontier-A Journey Along the Highland Line

The Highland Line is the most profound internal boundary in Britain. First recognised by Agricola in the first century AD (parts of its most northerly portion mark the furthest north the Romans got) it divides the country both geologically & culturally, signalling the border between Highland & Lowland, Celtic & English-speaking, crofting & farming. Take a journey of the imagination, tracing the route of the Line from the River Clyde through Perthshire & the North-east. In addition to exploring the huge importance of the Line over almost two thousand years, he also shows how it continues to influence life in 21st-century Scotland. Price: $24.95 Plus postage
