The Banner Says...

The water of life

by Sean Cairney

t is said Mark Twain once made the famous comment "Too much of anything is bad, but too much good whisky is barely enough." May in Scotland is traditionally Whisky Month, with events taking place across the five whisky regions (Highland, Lowland, Speyside, Islay and Campbeltown) of the country.

This year of course things may not be back to normal with the slow and measured opening of Scotland, however virtual events will ensure whisky aficionados are certain to still find ways to celebrate Uisge beatha, the Scottish Gaelic term for water of life. As we hit mid-month a global celebration also takes place with World Whisky Day on May 15th.

Each bottle of whisky produced tells a story

Each bottle of whisky made in Scotland certainly tells a story of the local region in which it was produced. From smokey and peaty Islay malts to the light bodied varieties from the Lowland's. With over 130 distilleries to be discovered across Scotland you can be just about anywhere and find some liquid gold being produced. This year alone Scotland is expected to open new distilleries in Loch Lomond, John O'Groats and Falkirk to name a few, with work being planned on future locations such as Edinburgh, Speyside, Islay and the Scottish Borders.

Some may also be surprised to learn of the reported health benefits which come with consuming whisky, at moderation of course.

Whisky is said to help with some surprising ailments so raising a dram just may be good for you! Whisky can lower your risk of heart disease, promote weight loss, help fight cancer, reduce blood clots, aid digestion and of course help with a common cold by having a Hot Toddy.

In this issue

To help celebrate Whisky Month we have featured just some of the great distilleries you can visit when it is safe to next travel to Scotland. Apart from sampling a dram many distilleries also tell a great story and have strong historical links to the local community. Scotland's distilleries come in all shapes and sizes, from large ones with innovative displays and interactive exhibits explaining the process, to small ones which have preserved their distilling techniques and secrets since the 18th century.

Today whisky is one of Scotland's top exports with hundreds of countries around the world wanting and consuming the dram of Scotland.

The town of Paisley can be missed from people's itineraries when visiting Scotland. It however is the largest town in Scotland and is only a short trip by train or car from Glasgow and has much to boast about. Paisley's growth in the early 19th century was mainly through textile production and the name Paisley was given to the Kashmiri pattern of curving shapes found on silk and cotton fabric. Paisley Museum is being transformed into a world-class destination which will retell the town's story to the world and is looking for the world to share their paisley history with them.

The most significant battle to take place within Glasgow was fought in the southside of the city on May 13, 1568 and was the Battle of Langside. The Catholic Mary, Queen of Scots was overwhelmingly defeated by Protestant forces after which she fled to England where she was incarcerated by her royal rival and distant cousin Elizabeth I and eventually executed.

The dram of Scotland

The first recorded evidence of whisky production in Scotland dates back to 1494 when monks made Aqua Vitae, as whisky was then known, in Fife. It is suspected however the tradition of whisky making pre-dates this, but one thing that is certain is that whisky production is very much a part of Scotland's culture, industry and psyche. As whisky began to be known across the country Scottish farmers would distil their surplus grain at the end of the harvest season to make the ever-popular drink. This led to the government imposing a whisky tax in 1644, which caused many a distiller to go underground and an illicit distilling and whisky smuggling boom was born. For well over 100 years canny Scots mixed farming and distilling with great skill, creating a network of stills and distribution to evade customs.

Today whisky is one of Scotland's top exports with hundreds of countries around the world wanting and consuming the dram of Scotland. It is now an industry that is worth over billion's to Scotland and has fans across the globe.

I hope you are able to sit back and enjoy your May and if that involves having a wee dram, here is to your good health! Cheers/Slàinte Mhath!

First look at faces of centuries-old Edinburgh-dwellers first glimpse has been revealed of what people living in Leith up to 700 years ago might have looked like. Forensic artists have used hi-tech software to reconstruct the faces of remains uncovered during the excavation of the medieval graveyard in Leith, dating back to between the 14th and 17th century, as part of the Trams to Newhaven project. Masters graduate students from the University of Dundee, working closely with project sub-contractors GUARD Archaeology and as part of an ongoing internship with the Council Archaeologist, used special 3D scanners to build up digital versions of skulls discovered during excavations outside South Leith Parish Church. These were the basis for lifelike representations created of the former residents, the first step in the aging analysis of bodies.

The first two pictures feature a man and woman both aged between 35 and 50. Early forensic analysis indicates that the woman may have suffered from nutritional deficiencies. Councillor Karen Doran, Transport and Environment Vice Convener, said: "It's so interesting to see these images. It really makes you think about what life could have been like in Leith all those years ago and I look forward to finding out more from the experts analysing the remains found."

Medieval Leith

Council Archaeologist John Lawson added: "These fantastic reconstructions help us connect directly with our forebearers. Often, we as archaeologists just see the physical remains but the work undertaken by Dundee University's forensic artists helps put the flesh, so to speak, back onto these remains and by doing so I feel brings them closer to us today."

Excavations were carried out in summer 2020 outside South Leith Parish Church, Constitution Street, where previous investigations showed that in the medieval period the church's graveyard extended across the road with graves surviving beneath the current road surface.

The team of archaeologists, who were working to remove any human remains that could be affected by the tram works, exhumed more than 360 bodies, dating from between 1300 and 1650, as well as finding the apparent remnants of the original medieval graveyard wall.

The remains are now subject to examination and analysis that will reveal information on the origins, health, diseases and diet of the people of medieval Leith. This has involved partnership work with the University of Dundee and Forensic Art MSc graduate students Viviana Conti and Elysia Greenway, who have created facial reconstructions and have recorded vlogs for the Trams to Newhaven YouTube account, explaining their process.

The main construction works on Leith Walk from Elm Row to Crown Place are currently underway, with traffic management involving Leith Walk being reduced to one citybound lane between London Road and Crown Place for the duration of the works.

SCOT POURRI

Send us your inquiries on life's little question marks.

Ever wanted to know what happened to your old pal from home, how to make your favourite Scottish meal, or wondered about a certain bit of Scottish history?

Prose and the Edge

This is the poem which was written for the challenge between myself and the artist John Trevorrow. We had agreed to write and paint on the theme of the two "Heroes" of our nation, Wallace and Burns. John Trevorrow's image is astoundingly beautiful I hope my poem does it justice.

Prose and the Edge

Edge of the sword, sharpest and keen. For victory & history so it would seem. Wallace, with his countrymen raised, who won victory on history's page?

A quill stroked pages among Scotland's elite, sought equality, fraternity at poetic retreats.

Where sits the victor when Quill crossed the sword? Was it blood when it ran or the sharpest word? Both now inhabit the coldest of soil, but which of these heroes still make the blood boil?

Wallace whose body was broken and spread, or Burns whose words are now World read?

Scottish Council Area song

My name's Dec Browne, I'm in Year 11 at school, and though I've spent my whole life in Australia, Scotland has been a land I've had a strong connection to ever since I first learnt about my Scottish ancestry as a toddler. Though I have never been given the chance to visit, Scottish culture has always given the impression of many good values to me, such as loyalty, faithfulness, purity, and belief in oneself.

Over the past year, I have been devoting more and more of my own time to learning about Scotland, its language and its culture. Recently, I wrote a song about the 32 council areas, to help make memorising them easier for me and anyone else who wanted to, whether young or old.

And for all the effort people from places like Australia and the US put into teaching and memorising their jurisdictions, I couldn't find too many memory aids online for Scotland's council areas, so I thought that you might be interested in using it to promote a love across Scotland for people's council areas and what makes each one special and unique. The lyrics are:

Tenement Tales

Like Jim Stoddart's Glasgow stories (Kings, Castles & "Durty" Wee Rascals), Brian Diamond's also made me laugh. The first twelve years of my life were spent in a tenement in Partick, Glasgow. We lived one up and had a 'Mrs G' on the ground floor. There were only four children in the close-me and my sister and two sisters also one up. I dare say we made noise running up and down the stairs, but we were oblivious to that. Our 'Mrs G', whose name I cannot recall,, would open her door and yell at us to be quiet and stop running around before we even got up the outside steps, or when she heard our front door open. My mother would tell her we were only kids playing. I remember one time my father telling her to go inside and put some cotton wool in her ears, much to the delight of my sister and me. We very rarely saw or heard her after that.

My sister and I always went to the Kelvin Hall with the Brownies to see the circus. Sometimes mum would come and we got to go on the rides.

Thank you Brian for the green paint story (the Scottish Banner, Tenement Tales, February, 2021). I could hear your mother screaming "Oh no, not the green paint!" The visual picture that conjured up had me laughing for ages. As a child in the 1950s myself, the shock your mother got is familiar to me. Carol Mitchell

South of Scotland's biggest community buyout completes he South of Scotland's largest community buyout has been legally completed following one of the most ambitious community fundraising campaigns ever seen and paving the way for the creation of a vast new nature reserve in Dumfries and Galloway. The landmark agreement of £3.8 million for 5,200 acres of land and six residential properties was reached between The Langholm Initiative charity and Buccleuch last October, after the community of Langholm's six-month fundraising drive reached its target in the final two days.

Tarras Valley Nature Reserve

With the transfer of ownership finalised, the community now owns the land for the first time in its history. Work is to begin immediately on creating the Tarras Valley Nature Reserve to help tackle climate breakdown, restore nature, and support community regeneration.

Margaret Pool, Chair of The Langholm Initiative, said: "Together we've achieved something which once seemed impossible, and today we can celebrate as a new era begins for this special land with which our community has such a deep and long-standing connection. Our sincere, heartfelt thanks go to so many people for making this historic moment for Langholm happen – including the generous donors and tireless volunteers, and to Buccleuch for being so supportive and positive in their approach."

Benny Higgins, Executive Chairman of Buccleuch, said: "To have concluded the sale to the community is a fantastic achievement, and a great example of what can be achieved when communities and businesses like Buccleuch engage openly with one another and work to a common goal. This was achieved by goodwill and working together, following voluntarily all the relevant guidance and protocols. We look forward to seeing the plans for the area coming to life over the coming months, and wish The Langholm Initiative all the very best with this. Buccleuch has been reducing the footprint of its landholdings in the last decade and, having sold approximately 30,000 acres of land in this period to farmers and community organisations, we will continue to reinvest revenue from land sales into a variety of business projects across the farming, forestry, renewable energy, and leisure and hospitality sectors."

The Langholm Initiative has set up Tarras Valley Nature Reserve for the day-to-day running of the ambitious new venture, and is currently recruiting two new members of staff who will oversee the landscape-scale nature-restoration project.

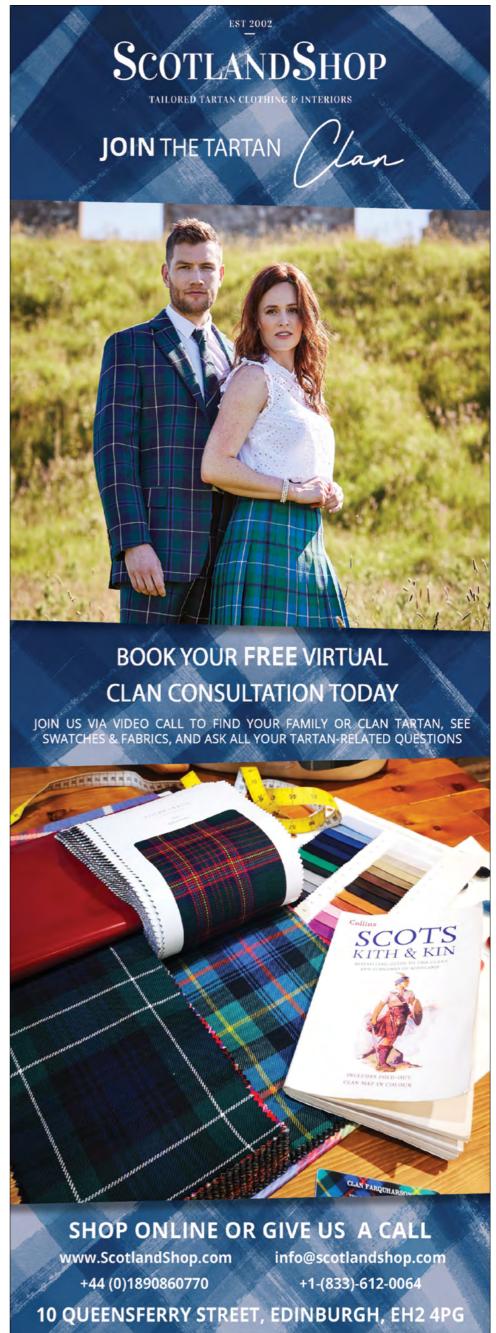

The environment at its heart

Globally important peatlands and ancient woods will be restored, native woodlands established, and a haven ensured for wildlife including rare hen harriers, the UK's most persecuted bird of prey. Plans for community regeneration include new nature-based tourism opportunities. Discussions are continuing between The Langholm Initiative and Buccleuch over another 5,300 acres of land the community wishes to buy, and which could double the size of the new nature reserve.

After the launch of the community's fundraising drive last May, The Langholm Initiative had until 31 October to raise the funds for the deal, to avoid the withdrawal of a £1m offer from the Scottish Land Fund. At times the project appeared to be seriously at risk. The Langholm Initiative now aims to show how community ownership can be a catalyst for regeneration with the environment at its heart, and hopes its success will inspire other communities in Scotland and across the UK.

The Langholm Initiative, formed in 1994 as one of south Scotland's first development trusts, facilitates projects making a lasting difference to the local area and people. See: www.langholminitiative.org.uk n Tuesday 4th May 2021, The National Piping Centre will launch a crowdfunding campaign to raise funds to protect the legacy of its Piping Times and Piping Today periodicals. The twostrand project involves digitisation of the magazine archive, a resource that will be free to access online, and the production of a new annual publication that carries the Piping Times title. With the Piping Times and Piping Today together recording over 90 years of piping history, and recognised internationally as the most significant source of piping information, opinion and news, both were forced to cease publication in 2020 due to the unprecedented financial challenges caused by the Covid-19 pandemic.

Influential in fostering an international piping community

The National Piping Centre's Director of Piping, Finlay MacDonald, said: "It was with the deepest regret that we have made the difficult decision to cease publication of the two magazines, Piping Times and Piping Today. Both titles hold a special place in the hearts of pipers across the world. Sadly, publication of the magazines could no longer be justified on the grounds of the associated costs. Dwindling circulation numbers - a common trend in publishing in recent years - meant that, despite their long histories, the savings made had a significant impact on the organisation's ability to weather the pandemic."

The College of Piping began publishing Piping Times in October 1948. As well as printing competition results, reviewing events and reporting general news in the piping world, it provided a platform for the exchange of opinions and ideas. It was also influential in fostering an international piping community.

Until his death in 1996, the magazine was edited by Seumas MacNeill, a cofounder of the College. In nearly 50 years as editor - a position he took no payment for - MacNeill never missed a single issue. An acerbic style of writing made him a controversial personality but his commitment to the publication bequeathed the piping community a substantial and valuable historical record. Subsequent editors were Robert Wallace, Colin MacLellan and Stuart Letford. In 2018, when the College was incorporated into The National Piping Centre, the magazine archive and its continued publication became part of the Centre's legacy commitment.

Great value to the international piping community

The National Piping Centre began publishing its own in-house magazine, Notes, shortly after opening in 1996. As the focus of the publication shifted to the broader world of piping its title changed to Piping Today. The bi-monthly magazine, under the editorship of The National Piping Centre's then Director of Piping, Roddy MacLeod MBE, maintained a distinctive voice in the piping community for almost 25 years. Head of Piping Studies at The National Piping Centre, John Mulhearn, said: "The history recorded in both magazines' archives is of great value to the international piping community. The unmatched resource it represents for students and scholars of the bagpipe cannot be overstated. In making this resource more accessible, future research will benefit profoundly."

The money raised from the crowdfunding campaign will be used to professionally digitise the magazine archive. It will then be hosted on The National Piping Centre's website and be free for the public to access and search. Donations to the campaign will also support the design and production of a new physical annual publication under the Piping Times banner. It is planned that the annual will be added to the digital archive each year. Finlay MacDonald continued: "Creating a physical record of the year's piping news is still a priority for us. By publishing a Piping Times Annual we hope to create a new archive for the future. This first volume, covering the period from Spring 2020 to Autumn 2021, will be of enormous historical importance.

While, on the one hand, far less piping activity has taken place due to the pandemic, the innovations that have taken place - most notably the explosion in online competitions - may be seen as a pivotal moment in the development of piping performance. It is essential that this is documented appropriately for researchers of the future."

SCOTSPEAK

Scotspeak is a selection of quotes which made headlines in Scotland last month on a variety of current Scottish affairs.

"I loved the job and meeting people. It kept me occupied and it stopped me moaning to me husband that I was bored. I have lovely customers and they have helped me to keep going in the role, even though my eyesight is getting worse, by reading the scales. I have now decided that it is time to retire."

Postmaster Winifred Ryan said as she announced her retirement at the Achahoish Post Office in Argyll. Mrs Ryan has run the post office since 1963 and had it not been for her failing eyesight would have continued in the role beyond her 58 years of service.

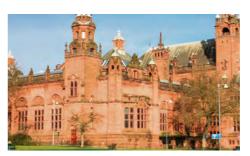

"The Pineapple is one of the most significant buildings in Scotland and its unique ambience is dependent on its setting within Dunmore Park with its woodland and abundant wildlife. It is clear to us that this development scheme would have a hugely adverse impact on the site, which is designated within the Inventory of Gardens and Designed Landscapes in Scotland. As we have seen all too often, inappropriatelyscaled and sited developments have impaired or overwhelmed many important historic and natural landscapes and it's our obligation to ensure that this does not happen to The Pineapple."

The National Trust for Scotland's Chief Executive, Phil Long said as the conservation charity lodged a formal objection to a planning application lodged by George Russell Construction for a housing development at Mains Farm, Airth, directly adjacent to The Pineapple and the historic Dunmore Estate. Dating to 1761, The A-Listed Pineapple is one of Scotland's most exotic and celebrated buildings and was constructed by the Earl of Dunmore amid a purpose-designed landscape. The overall development plans for 82 houses causes the Trust great concern for the integrity and setting of the landscape around the Pineapple, as well as the threat to wildlife. The property has been in the Trust's care since 1973.

"This 16th century millstone is one of the few remnants of water-powered mill that once stood in the castle grounds next to the Dour Burn, and an important piece of the story of the site. Grain was ground into flour between this stone and a larger flat one underneath. A wooden spindle, powered by a waterwheel, turned the top stone. The loss of such an artefact is a heritage crime which robs us of a priceless piece of our past, and we would urge anyone with information regarding this incident to contact Police Scotland on 101."

A Historic Environment Scotland spokesperson said as a priceless 500-year-old stone object has been stolen from Aberdour Castle in Fife. The medieval Aberdour is one of the oldest masonry castles still standing in Scotland and has been made famous as a location on the TV series Outlander.

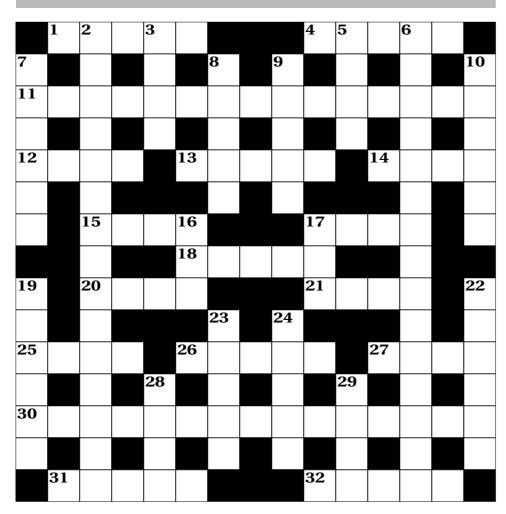

"It's become clear that the cultural and heritage sectors want to know more about where people look online for information about their exhibits; what they search for, where they come from and how long they spend looking. We will be looking at 12 months of the digital footprints of the National Galleries and National Museums Scotland, to analyse and understand the actions and cultural interests of users, whether they are repeat users or whether they have become involved during the pandemic. Many people have had no option other than to go online to view collections during the pandemic. We will look across platforms to see whether there has been growth of traffic or different patterns coming from certain groups of users, such as different sectors, school pupils or researchers, working on specific themes in art. We will also examine whether emerging interests or social events have had an influence. We will aim to develop our findings for a standardised approach and common framework so that cultural institutions can continue to have an accessible presence during the pandemic and any future events."

Professor Gobinda Chowdhury, of the University of Strathclyde's Department of Computer and Information Sciences said the transfer of museum and gallery collections online during the COVID-19 pandemic is being investigated in research led at the university. Strathclyde is working with National Museums Scotland, National Galleries of Scotland and the University of Edinburgh to analyse the digital pathways of visitors to the gallery and museum websites during lockdown. The study will aim to establish what attracts visitors, which pathways, such as search engines and arts platforms, lead to their engagement and how different stages of the pandemic have affected interaction.

"We studied the Declaration of Arbroath and how it functioned at the time of 1320 - background factors that influenced how it was written and who sent it, who it was for and how it was received. That led us into thinking about how to write a new declaration, in the context of where we are now. The role of technology is always a factor, and clearly influences how we communicate now. Digital platforms and online spaces offer useful and exciting possibilities, while at the same time throwing up parallel concerns around ownership and control, freedom of expression, hate speech, censorship, selfcensorship and identity."

Rebecca Sharp of the New Declarations project said as young people have been invited to examine the historic Declaration of Arbroath on modern platforms such as Instagram and Tik Tok. Participants will be exploring ideas and issues around freedom of expression. Starting with a look at the Declaration of Arbroath (1320), its historical and cultural significance - before looking at how we communicate today; the role of technology, how it shapes the issues we face around free speech. The Declaration of Arbroath is one of the most famous documents ever produced in Scotland. It was a statement written to make the case for a nation's claim to freedom. Dated 6 April 1320, it turned 701 years old in April 2021.

KINGS CASTLES AND "DURTY" WEE RASCALS

Australian Jim Stoddart was born in a Glasgow Tenement and raised in a Glasgow Housing Scheme 1943-1965. Jim will be taking readers on a trip down memory lane, of a time and place that will never be the same again, and hopes even if only a few people in the Scot's Diaspora have a dormant folk memory awakened, then he shall be more than delighted.

Cornalee Road

Mickey moose cam' tae ma hoose,' I asked him whit he wanted, A piece an' jam, and a hurl in ma pram, That is whit he wanted.

A rhyme for counting out things.

always liked the sound of the name of the place where I lived in Pollok. 'Cornalee Road' I thought, had an elegance that was lost from the connotations raised by 'Blackburn Street' in Plantation. I was playing there as usual with my lead soldiers in my bedroom at number 39 when suddenly a man's big face loomed up and stared in at me. My heart skipped a beat as I looked back in fear and horror. I lived on the top floor of a one-storey building so this was not an everyday occurrence. The face disappeared just as quickly as it had come. I was totally unprepared for this. My mum and dad had warned me about what would now be called 'stranger danger' although the streets were so safe at that time that I enjoyed a freedom of movement unheard of by modern day children. We had sniggered in the playground about 'willie-watchers' and worse. We were on the lookout for these dangerous predators whenever we had to go to the public toilet in Househilllwood Park but I was not ready for this situation at my own house. I was about to shout, scream, run or do whatever people do when a murderer or a sex maniac is about to get them.

Hughie

"Hullo there, son", boomed out a loud voice, "would ye mind gettin' me some clean watter fur ma pail, son? After I finish this windae will do - and could ye rinse out this 'shammy' for me? I'll meet ye doonstairs." It was wee Hughie, the window cleaner. In the years to come I would get a warning.

I would hear the scraping of his ladder on the roughcast and pebble dash as the ladder is pushed up to reach the window ledge or I would hear him talking to a neighbour for Hughie was stone deaf and conversations in the months and years to come could go something like this.

"'Hullo', Mrs. Stoddart, how are you the day then?" shouts Hughie having moved along to the living room with his replenished bucket of water. "Not so bad, Hughie." replies my mum, raising her voice a little. "Naw, I won't have a cup of tea this time, if ye don't mind Mrs. Stoddart. I'm a bit behind in my work the day."

"Okay then, suit yourself. It looks like rain coming," says my mum with a quiet smile. "Aye the pain's no' so bad now but it fair gives me gyp in the wet weather." "Have you seen a chiropractor about your back since it's been bothering you, Hughie?" "Naw, no' noo, I used to back Partick Thistle, when I was a boy, that is, but I hav'nae been to a fitba match at Firhill for years noo."

As Hughie's sponge and chamois leather glided swiftly over the panes of glass on our windows, he and my mother continued this strange conversation for the next twenty minutes or so. Much to my shame, I taught myself in the future to make sure I disappeared into a room on the opposite side of the house from where he was working and whenever I heard the scrape of his ladder on the wall. That way I could avoid answering his questions that always seem to raise more questions than ever got answered. He was a really nice wee man and my mother carried on lengthy conversations with him every month with the patience of a saint, for well over a decade.

ING TODAY

And if we didn't know about what was happening in the lives of our neighbours, we could always listen in to Hughie's loud conversations with them.

It broadcasted the news to all and sundry but it never did make a lot of sense.

Interesting people

My father also suffered badly from industrial deafness acquired from years of working in the shipyards but his was not half as bad as Hughie's affliction. My dad's was, nevertheless, debilitating socially yet he never wore a hearing aid until his 'old age'. By that time, it was next to useless. I think he was too vain to wear one when he might have got some benefit. He was always at work when Hughie came and we were spared a possible mind-blowing conversation between the two of them. Now that I was living in Pollok, I was presented with a whole new set of interesting people and neighbourhood experiences. There were so few shops that families largely depended upon mobile shops. As well as the fishmonger, the fruiterer and the City Bakery van, there was a very large Co-op grocery van that regularly visited our streets. We walked into the back of this van to select the produce stocked on the racks each side of the aisle, much in the same way as we would for selecting books in our mobile library. Mobile libraries also plied the streets.

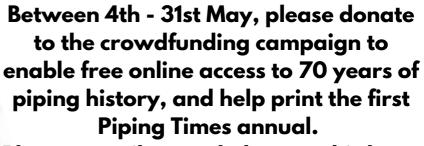

I mistakenly thought that the rag and bone man who came up Cornalee Road with his horse and cart was the same one who came to Blackburn Street when I was younger. What seemed like the same old horse took a well-earned rest to swat some flies with its tail at the top of our hill whilst his master exchanged the same balloons and toys for rags as the earlier rag man in Govan. The old horse, covered in flies, and the old well-worn cart, looked exactly the same. Now that I was older I joined the other weans in pestering my mother for some old clothes to make the swap. We would have taken off our shirts and jerseys and traded them in, there and then, if our mothers had not found something for us. So strong was the call of 'toys for any old rags'.

There was also a handsome Spanish onion man with a suave Breton black beret and an interesting accent. He had his brown shiny onions strung all along the front and back of his bicycle. It was a wonder that he could ever ride his bike at all, never mind all the way from Madrid and up our hill with such a load. We really did believe that he had taken off with these onions from sunny Spain or Brittany and travelled all the way to us in Glasgow on his bike. My mother always bought her onions from him. Even more impressive was the knifesharpener. In the blink of an eye, he turned his three-wheeled bicycle into a scissor-sharpening, knife-sharpening, and garden shear-sharpening wonder machine. He first turned the bicycle on its end and used the pedals and gears to turn gritty sandstone sharpening stone, instead of the wheels. Adding dabs of water and spit he skillfully moved the scissors and knives along the rotating wheel, until they were as sharp as new. My mother always had work for him. Then there were the tinkers. They occasionally came to our door with wooden clothes pegs to sell or with a strange straw figure for a talisman to give you luck. We had to buy from them. For if we didn't my mother said that they might put a curse on our house and on all of us living there as well.

Designer Dr Pam Hogg leads the call to #ShowUsYourPaisley for Paisley Museum's 150th anniversary

ashion designer Pam Hogg is leading a call-out for Paisley-patterned items the public have at home - from clothing to cookware - to mark the 150th anniversary of Paisley Museum. The #ShowUsYourPaisley call-out will encourage the public to share any objects they have incorporating the famous pattern, with the museum considering the most intriguing and unusual submissions for inclusion in a new display being created as part of the museum's £42million redevelopment. Items can be historic or contemporary, high-fashion or functional, but all need to feature the iconic teardrop motif.

Pam Hogg, Paisley-born designer and Patron of Paisley Museum, said: "The Paisley pattern has had a lasting impact on the world and has been endlessly reinterpreted and reinvented. There are examples of Paisley pattern all around us and I'd like to encourage the public to share their items and the stories of how they were acquired, used, loved and passed down. The most interesting will be considered for display alongside a piece from my 2020 couture show, where I created the Paisley Poodle print incorporating my life-long love of the iconic Paisley design. As a child I was fascinated with the museum's collection and can't wait for its expansion."

The iconic teardrop motif

Paisley's Free Public Library and Museum opened on 11 April 1871, aiming to provide local people with the means of self-improvement inspired by the ideals of the Scottish Enlightenment.

The Paisley pattern has had a lasting impact on the world and has been endlessly reinterpreted and reinvented.

It was open to all, although it had strict by-laws for entry which excluded anyone "in an intoxicated or unclean condition" or those "in whose house infectious diseases exist". In 1905, the museum held its first exhibition of Paisley shawls in recognition of the impact the textiles had had on the town's fortunes. Many gifted these shawls to the museum permanently when the exhibition concluded, and over 115 years later the museum is asking the public to continue this tradition. Kashmir shawls began to arrive in Europe in the 18th and 19th centuries, brought back by travellers and via trade routes, including with the East India Company and the Mughal Empire. Many featured the 'boteh', a motif in the shape of a curved droplet. By the 1800s they had become extremely fashionable and European textile centres began producing 'imitation Indian' shawls. Manufacturers in Paisley quickly adopted new weaving techniques and technologies including jacquard looms, allowing them to mass produce these items and become the market leaders by the 1830s.

This sparked the start of the trend for referring to these shawls as 'Paisleys'. Kirsty Devine, Paisley Museum Project Director, said: "The iconic teardrop motif has long been associated with Paisley's history and heritage and is an integral part of the museum's collection. We will tell the story of this design, so synonymous with the town, from its Kashmir origins all the way through to its modern-day use by major fashion labels. The pattern has been seen on different types of objects globally throughout history. What better way to celebrate the 150th anniversary of Paisley Museum than paying homage to the town's most famous export? We're very excited to see what hidden gems the public are able to uncover and share with us through the #ShowUsYourPaisley call-out."

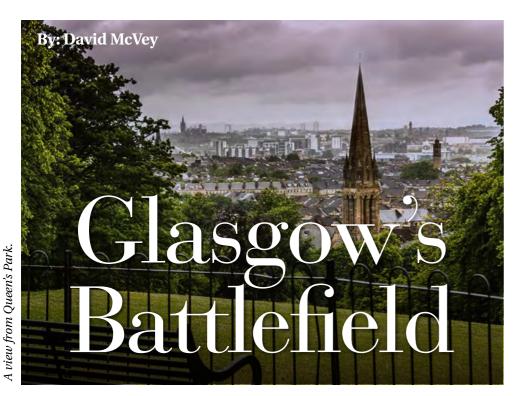

Paisley pattern

Although the fashion for the shawls that made the town's fortune dwindled by the 1870s, the 'Paisley pattern' continued to appear in garments and in the 1960s had a dramatic revival with the likes of rock legends The Beatles and Jimi Hendrix wearing the designs. The pattern has continued to be a source of inspiration for leading fashion designers, including the Italian fashion house ETRO. Jacopo Etro, Creative Director of ETRO Home & Accessories, said: "Paisley has appeared on every imaginable fabric, bridging East and West, masculine and feminine, elegance and eccentricity. The symbol has evolved and morphed as new techniques and colours have been applied to it, carrying the design from clothing into the worlds of accessories, fragrances and homewares.' Away from the world of fashion, the pattern also began to appear on massproduced objects from the 1960s onwards. The public have sporadically gifted these objects to the museum - from a frying pan to a roll of toilet paper donated for people's "amusement, edification and enjoyment". It continues to appear on everyday objects, most recently on face masks during the Covid-19 pandemic.

Paisley Museum is being transformed into a world-class destination which will retell the town's story to the world and help bring huge volumes of new visitors and footfall to the town. The work is the flagship project within Renfrewshire Council's wider investment in venues and the town centre aimed at using Paisley's unique and internationally-significant cultural and heritage story to transform the area's future.

The public has until Sunday 30 May 2021 to submit their Paisley pattern item suggestions for consideration. They should be emailed to paisleymuseum@renfrewshire. gov.uk, or shared on social media using #ShowUsYourPaisley and tagging @paisleymuseum and include a photograph, description and story behind the object.

t's May 2, 1568, and one of the most cinematic scenes in Scottish regal history is unfolding; a former queen is sprung from her prison on an island castle and rowed to freedom by night in a small boat. The keys to the castle are thrown away, they glint briefly in the moonlight, and then slip into the dark depths of the loch. Distantly, those locked in the island castle escape and discover that all the other boats have been disabled and pursuit is impossible.

Whether Mary Stuart's escape from Lochleven Castle happened according to the romantic legend or not (a bunch of keys was retrieved from the loch centuries later, but it isn't thought that they belonged to the castle) the escape achieved little, for her forces suffered defeat 11 days later at the Battle of Langside. It's a battle that isn't well-known beyond Glasgow and hardly at all outside Scotland.

In 1568, Langside, a couple of miles south of Glasgow, was a small village surrounded by farmland and tracts of wilder countryside spread over a number of prominent low hills. Today, almost everything has changed; but not quite everything. Mary had abdicated, unwillingly, in 1567 in favour of her infant son, who was later crowned James VI in Stirling's Holy Rude Kirk. She had become hugely unpopular after marrying her third husband, the Earl of Bothwell, an unattractive character who, apart from anything else, had probably been involved in the murder of Lord Darnley, her second husband. Mary gathered her forces and the two sides confronted each other at Carberry Hill near Musselburgh. Mary's side surrendered without bloodshed (Bothwell having slunk away) and she ended up captive on that Loch Leven island.

The site of the Battle of Langside is now at the heart of Glasgow's Southside, the part of the city south of the River Clyde. It's an area of prosperous suburbs, with many sturdy Victorian villas. Roads carry heavy traffic - a Victorian memorial to the battle is stranded on a traffic island - and railway cuttings slice through hills that were of tactical importance on the day of battle. Yet the clues remain; a district of Glasgow is actually called Battlefield, traversed by Battlefield Road. Other names, as we'll see, also provide important clues. Even in a densely populated city, there are reminders and remains and, remarkably, part of the battle site has never been built on at all.

Queen's Park

Those opposing Mary (the 'King's Men') were led by the Earl of Moray, who ruled as Regent for the infant king, while Mary's army (the 'Queen's Men') was commanded by Archibald Campbell, the Earl of Argyll; Bothwell had fled abroad. The battle itself was a minor affair; Mary's army of perhaps 6000 was marching from Hamilton Palace to Dumbarton Castle, hoping to add to their muster there, but the way was blocked by Moray at Langside. The two sides formed into their battle arrays.

The subsequent encounter lasted barely 45 minutes but even though the Queen's Men were decisively defeated, it's unlikely they lost more than 400 men; Moray's losses were minimal. Much of the fighting took place in what is now Queen's Park, one of the city's celebrated open spaces. There were stories that many of Mary's dead were buried in a mass grave towards the north end of the park near the famous boating pond. Even their ghosts were said to have been seen in the 19th century, but, like most reports of 'mass graves' in early battles, nothing has ever been found.

Queen's Park rises to a prominent summit with a breath-taking view over the city to the north and great hills beyond. Nearby is an ancient earthwork, Camphill, which has been excavated several times. Evidence of ancient occupation was found but it has proved impossible to date the structure; it was there at the time of the battle but did not play any part in it.

To the east is more high ground in the form of Clincart Hill and Prospecthill, both now heavily built up; the Langside Campus of Glasgow Clyde College today squats on Clincart Hill and Prospecthill is mostly residential and overlooks the national football stadium, Hampden Park. The two hills are now further split by the railway cutting that holds Mount Florida Station. Mary's forces were drawn up on Clincart Hill and it's tempting to draw significance from the name 'Prospecthill'; did Mary watch the battle from there? It has been suggested but seems unlikely. Another site, marked by a monument on the hill of Court Knowe, a mile to the south-east, is also suggested as Mary's viewpoint. Court Knowe is now in Linn Park, near the low ruins of the former Cathcart Castle.

The site of the Battle of Langside is now at the heart of Glasgow's Southside, the part of the city south of the River Clyde.

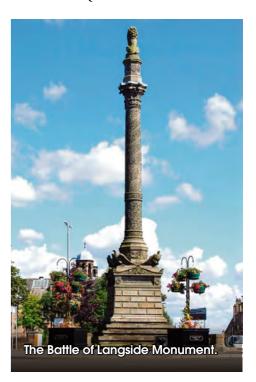

This seems an even more unlikely vantage point; it's a long way from the battlefield and would have been a terrible viewpoint. The occupants of the castle at the time, the Semples, opposed Mary so it would have been a hazardous place from which to watch a battle. Another tradition, that Mary slept in the castle the night before the battle, seems unlikely for the same reason. The monument at Court Knowe was erected in 1799 by Sir George Cathcart. The original is now in Kelvingrove Museum; its Victorian replacement at Court Knowe was restored in 2010.

spending her last night in Scotland at Dundrennan Abbey. After that, she sought refuge with her cousin, Elizabeth 1 of England, but instead was kept as a prisoner for nearly two decades and executed at Fotheringhay Castle in 1587.

The monument to the battle is an impressive structure, topped by a lion with its paw on a cannonball. It combines a traditional Scots Mercat Cross with a classical, intricately carved victory column. It was unveiled in 1888 (the 300thanniversary of the battle) and, despite the traffic roaring round it, is in good condition, having been restored by the Cathcart Society for the 400th anniversary. Just south of the monument is Algie Street; apart from a Tyre Centre on one side, it is a short street full of Victorian splendour, with fine tenements and the former Langside Free Church (now a restaurant, but designed by Alexander Skirving, who was also responsible for the monument). The 1568 village of Langside stood roughly where Algie Street is today.

The Glasgow districts of Langside and Battlefield recall more about the battle and its personalities in their street names. There is Battlefield Road, of course, but also Dundrennan Avenue and Lochleven Road. North-east of Queen's Park, in the district of Crosshill, is Queen Mary's Avenue (where John Buchan lived in his youth). A 1921 mural in Langside Library, painted by Glasgow School of Art students, depicts the battle.

But perhaps the greatest survivals of the battle remain to be found. It's remarkable that so much of a battlefield in a great city is still unbuilt on. Perhaps there are poignant reminders, lost on the day of battle and now buried, that will one day be unearthed in Queen's Park.

A battlefield in a great city After the battle Mary was taken south,

Discovering Scotland's Distilleries

There are over 130 active whisky distilleries spread across Scotland, which are split into five whisky-producing regions; Campbeltown, Highland, Islay, Lowland and Speyside. Here are just some that you can visit when next able to enjoy Scotland, cheers to that!

roduced in Scotland for centuries, whisky is widely celebrated as the country's national drink.

It's distinct and varied flavours are heavily influenced by the regions in which it is made, a fact that is celebrated as part of national whisky month in May.

Named uisge beatha in Gaelic, which translates to 'water of life', whisky is produced at more than 120 distilleries across Scotland, with each producing unique and stimulating tastes.

These distilleries are divided up into 5 main whisky producing regions – Speyside, Islay, Campbeltown, Highland and Lowland – and a visit to any one of these represents a memorable way to enjoy Scotland on your next visit. So, pour yourself a dram and get ready to plan your next visit to Scotland, when it is safe to do so, with a stop at one of Scotland's many great distilleries.

Glenkinchie

Located just a short drive from Edinburgh, with a twice daily shuttle service running from the city centre, Glenkinchie is known as 'the capital's malt'. The distillery's origins date back to 1825 and its name actually derives from the former landowners, the De Quincys. The site closed in 1853 when its owners, the Rate brothers, were bankrupted, but re-opened in 1881 and has been in constant use since. Aside from being one of the easiest to reach from Edinburgh Airport, Glenkinchie also offers visitors a range of options from access to their exhibitions – with a dram included – to guided tours. Glenkinchie also forms part of a tour within a tour. The malt is one of the 'four corners' used to create the world famous Johnnie Walker and one of four stops for fans tracing the roots of the blend. Location: Pencaitland, East Lothian.

Lagavulin

With its 16-year-old malt consistently ranking among the highest scores at international competitions and having featured in books, movies and TV shows, Lagavulin has helped build Islay's reputation as Scotland's whisky island. The West Wing, Parks and Recreation and the Walking Dead TV series are just some of the shows Lagavulin has featured in. Someone risked their life to get their hands on a bottle in the latter and it has a taste unique to the isle. The distillery can actually trace its roots back to one of 10 illegal distilleries on the site, which date back to 1742 and, aside from its rich, peaty flavour, the unusual pear-shaped stills are the biggest draw for visitors. The distillery is also a part of the Islay Fèis, Islay's amazing festival of music and malt, cancelled however for 2021.

Location: Port Ellen, Isle of Islay.

Caol Ila

Another Islay malt, Caol Ila, takes its name from the Islay Straight, which it overlooks from its home in Port Askaig. The distillery has been based here since 1846 although the current building opened in 1974 and it is the largest distillery on the island. You can take a range of tours here, including the Luxury Chocolate and Whisky Tasting Experience and, if you get your timing right, you could visit during the Fèis Ìle Music and Malt Festival, which includes an open day at the distillery. As one of the 'four corners' of Johnnie Walker, Caol Ila is the Islay malt that goes into Scotland's most celebrated blend. Location: Port Askaig, Isle of Islay.

Oban

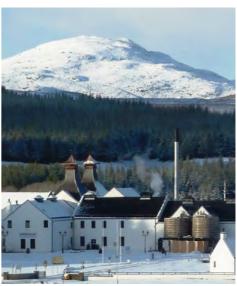

A distillery which inspired a town, Oban actually built up around the whisky site which opened in 1794. Yes, the area has been settled since Mesolithic times - a cave from this era was actually uncovered below the distillery – but the population grew dramatically when the whisky started to flow. This unique history has placed Oban at the heart of the local community ever since – the distillery is sponsoring Oban Live this year. Its location also makes it a great launch point for Islay and the isles by ferry. Originally opened by the Stevenson brothers, it wasn't until 1890 and the rebuilding overseen by J Walter Higgin following a fire, that this whisky really built its reputation for exceptional quality. That reputation saw Oban survive the fire, the whisky crash after 1900 and the risk of closure in the 1960s. And with only two stills and as one of the smallest distilleries in Scotland, it proves that the best things really do come in small packages. Location: Oban, Argyll.

Blair Athol

The ancient source of Allt Dour, 'the burn of the otter', flows through the grounds of Blair Athol from the foothills of the Grampian Mountain range. The distillery is one of Scottish whisky's great survivors, re-emerging after closure and a period of inactivity since opening in 1798. It has been in permanent use since 1949. A rich and sweet malt, 'best enjoyed with a dash of water', its flavour makes it a very popular choice. And the town of Pitlochry is the perfect base for exploring the Highlands and continuing on the whisky trail. Location: Pitlochry, Perthshire.

Dalwhinnie

Picked for its location, near fresh spring water and peat from the nearby bogs, the Dalwhinnie site was also a stopping point on the ancient drovers' routes through the surrounding mountains. It is also unusual in that it spent a short period of its life, which officially began in 1897, in the hands of American owners. Their tenure was brought to an end by the advent of Prohibition in 1919. Visitors today are advised to check that the roads are open and tours are running during winter. They are also advised to book in advance, with tours regularly selling out - which is not surprising given the fact that one comes with a special chocolate tasting in partnership with Iain Burnett, the Highland

 ${\bf Location: Dalwhinnie, Highlands.}$

Royal Lochnagar

This distillery's reputation for single malt whisky has literally been forged in fire.

Opened in 1826 after whisky production was legalised, the distillery was razed to the ground not once but twice in suspicious circumstances. The finger was pointed at rivals running illicit stills in the region.

Somehow, Lochnagar endured and reopened in 1845. Three years later Queen Victoria paid a visit from nearby Balmoral Castle, issued a Royal Warrant and the current name Royal Lochnagar was born. Today it is one of the smallest distilleries in Scotland.

Location: Ballater, Aberdeenshire.

Cragganmore

Cragganmore was the brainchild and lifelong dream of Big John Smith. Big John had worked as a manager at four different distilleries but was desperate to strike out on his own. He had the knowledge and experience, picking the perfect site near the Craggan Burn and Strathspey Railway and opened the distillery in 1869. With an abundance of raw material and the business acumen to make his idea work, Cragganmore was soon the talk of whisky connoisseurs. That reputation and the distillery endures today, long after the Strathspey Railway closed, and this year Cragganmore celebrates its 150th birthday. The distillery is also a key venue in the annual and very popular Spirit of Speyside Whisky Festival (virtual this year from 29th April – 2nd May).

 ${\bf Location: Ball in dalloch, Moray\ Speyside.}$

Cardhu

One of the jewels on the Malt Whisky Trail, Cardhu is the first distillery to officially be founded by a woman. Helen Cumming actually ran the distillery illegally between 1811 and 1824, before it was licensed. And the tradition of strong female leaders endured when her daughter-in-law Elizabeth took over in 1872. Together they defined and refined the Cardhu flavour which endures to this day. There are a range of tours running on site but aficionados are usually keen to play the whisky guessing game, Guess Dhu and enter the Cardhu Hall of Fame. Call in advance to book a spot on the tours. Cardhu also features as one of the four corners in Johnnie Walker and, like Cragganmore, is part of the Spirit of Speyside Whisky Festival.

Location: Aberlour, Moray Speyside.

Talisker

Zigzagging back across the country, the Isle of Skye is home to Talisker, one of Scotland's best loved whiskies and one of the most popular stop offs on the Hebridean Whisky Trail. Founders Hugh and Kenneth MacAskill had a few failed attempts at launching a distillery on the island but their fortunes changed dramatically when they acquired the lease to Talisker House in 1830. Proclaimed 'the king o' drinks' by Robert Louis Stevenson, it is a sweet and full-bodied single malt and the distillery and visitor centre is one of the highlights for visitors to the island.

Location: Carbost, Isle of Skye.

Glen Ord

Glen Ord Is the only remaining single malt distillery on the Black Isle peninsula, which would have seemed remarkable to founder Thomas Mackenzie in 1838 with the area having an abundance of sites, both legal and otherwise, at that time. It has an enduring connection to the McKenzie Clan, with the land the distillery is built on owned by them for over 700 years. The distillery has grown over the centuries and, with people flocking to the Black Isle for tours, a visitor centre opened in 1994. Recently the distillery hosted the inaugural Highland Whisky Festival.

${\bf Location: Muir\ of\ Ord, Highlands.}$

Clynelish

Situated on the North Coast 500 route, Clynelish is the final stop on the Johnnie Walker 'four corners' tour and is the most northern point of the blend. The distillery overlooks the North Sea and has links to the legendary Brora distillery. In 2019 it co-hosted the inaugural Highland Whisky Festival drawing even more visitors to the site. Tours range from the scenic to the connoisseur with the latter including a tasting of some of its rarest malts. One of Scotland's most northerly distilleries, it's well worth the visit to Brora.

Location: Brora, Highlands.

World class whisky experience

There are currently more than 120 active distilleries in Scotland, but we're not stopping there, with two classics ready to come back to life. Their names have been uttered in reverential tones for decades, their whiskies passing into legend. Brora and Port Ellen joined the ranks of Scotland's ghost distilleries when they closed in 1983 and since then their whiskies have fetched thousands at auction. In 2017 one golden age malt from Brora sold for £15,000 in Hong Kong. Now both distilleries are set to re-open in 2021. They will be among Scotland's smallest distilleries, with visitor centres onsite and their master blenders working to replicate the original tastes of the whiskies.

Plans are also at an advanced stage to transform one of Edinburgh's most well-known buildings into a 'world class whisky experience' and create yet another landmark on Princes Street. Taking over the former House of Fraser building, the Johnnie Walker Experience will occupy all floors from the ground up and literally raise the roof with a new rooftop bar. The listed building's original features, including the famous cantilevered clock will be protected. The experience will also create 180 new jobs in the capital and include an events space for performances and shows and a 'bar academy'. The project is on schedule to open in the summer of 2021.

Castle Cluggy rescue mission begins

n ancient Strathearn castle is to be preserved if ambitious plans to prevent it collapsing further and to open it up to the public are approved by Perth and Kinross Council, but the charity which has taken on Castle Cluggy at Loch Monzievaird for the benefit of the nation admits it is a real "doer-upper".

Situated on the northern shore of Loch Monzievaird, nestled in the heart of the private Ochtertyre estate minutes from the town of Crieff, Castle Cluggy is one of Strathearn's ancient dwellings and was the ancestral seat of the Murray baronets of Ochtertyre for several centuries. Now, as befits its dark, feudal past, the drawbridge is potentially being lowered again on access to the Category B-listed structure.

One of Scotland's least-known historic castles

One of Scotland's least-known historic castles, Castle Cluggy is situated on a little peninsula called the 'Dry Isle', approached in former times only by a drawbridge. The nearby crannog is said to have been used in days gone by as a place of containment for any prisoners held by the castle. Despite its ruined state, this hidden gem hides an incredible history. The castle is traditionally said to have belonged to John Comyn III, known as 'the Red Comyn', an important figure in the Wars of Scottish Independence, and Guardian of Scotland for a time. He is probably best known for having been stabbed to death by Robert the Bruce at the high altar of Greyfriar's Kirk in Dumfries in 1306. One of the possessions of the powerful earls of Strathearn, the site was a pawn in extended blood feuds between the Drummonds and Murrays until ownership was settled in favour of the Murrays. Fortified since at least the 14th century the fortress was referred to as 'ancient' in a charter of 1467 - much of the original castle has been destroyed revealing an impressive square tower with thick walls and arrow slots.

Castle Cluggy Charitable Trust has been set up by Keith Murray-Hetherington, in whose own veins runs the blood of the Murrays. Trust chairman Keith has a deep love of Scotland, its history and heritage, especially castles - which he describes as an active passion. He has made it his mission to preserve what is left of Castle Cluggy and to make it easily accessible to all. Keith told the Scottish Banner: "History buffs and local residents will probably know the old tower, which is still easily discernible as a castle but somewhat spoilt by a multitude of warning signs and protective fencing advising of the dangers of falling masonry. The charitable trust's purposes are the advancement of heritage and education, in particular through the maintenance, repair, and preservation of the physical remains of the structure known as Castle Cluggy, a building of major regional importance and national significance, for the benefit of the public".

Keith first visited the estate on holiday as a child but it was only through a chance discovery that he stumbled across the little-known castle hidden by trees, and the connection with the Murray clan sparked his interest in bringing the ancient structure back to good health. He explained: "You cannot see this property from the road and you would not even know it existed, but when you cast your eyes on it for the first time, it undoubtedly brings out the romantic in you.

The silhouetted outline of the building looks very dramatic but there are trees growing out of the walls which will cause the castle to collapse further if not removed. We are not rebuilding or restoring the castle to its original appearance, but we are focussed on repairing, stabilising, and preserving the structure in the form it is today for future generations to enjoy. It would have been so easy to allow the castle to collapse into a picturesque ruin but the huge task of rescuing one of the oldest fortresses in Scotland has begun. It is a labour of love. I arise to this labour every morning with increasing desire to complete it." Keith continued: "My vision is for the widest possible general public to have the fullest access to as much of Castle Cluggy as possible. Ideally, new steps and hand rails up to the castle, and a viewing platform, will be built to allow people of all ages and abilities to enjoy the ancient historical site".

Books and cards play part in conservation

Substantial work is needed to conserve Castle Cluggy for future generations. Trustees are currently reviewing the quantity surveyor's report to get a clearer idea of costs for the preservation work, as well as discussing details of the way forward. Castle Cluggy Charitable Trust head trustee Keith Murray-Hetherington said the charity is also actively working with partners to offer young people training in heritage skills, along with residents, community groups, and schools, and it is hoped that the pandemic situation will improve soon so that work can get underway. Those interested in saving the historic castle can also donate to the charity. Keith said: "It is hoped that people worldwide may consider helping with these efforts by making a donation, whatever the amount, to save the castle for future generations". Products featuring Castle Cluggy are also available to buy, with the proceeds going towards the conservation work. These include a limited-edition fully-illustrated book -The History of Castle Cluggy - ancestral seat of the Murrays of Ochtertyre -Christmas cards featuring a wintry scene of the old tower by local photographer the Strathearn Snapper, and limited edition prints of the castle painted in watercolours by Scottish artist Kimberley Smith.

World Storytelling Day seemed the appropriate time to launch the celebrations, as Scott is renowned as one of the world's greatest storytellers, and his global impact is reflected in the range and diversity of our partners."

Alex Paterson, CEO of Historic Environment Scotland (HES) , said: "Walter Scott remains an iconic and important figure in Scotland's story, both historically and culturally and HES is looking forward to playing our part in celebrating the 250th anniversary of his life and works. Five reasons Scott matters today

Living History

Sir Walter Scott believed that the material culture of the past could bring history to life. Ready access to things created, used and lost by the people of the past was essential to Scott's inspiration and success as a writer of historical fiction. He was a passionate advocate of experiential learning: encouraging people to visit battlefields, landmarks and ruins; to explore the features of their landscapes, and to imagine their many histories playing out there in full cinematic colour.

He was interested in hearing the lost voices and songs of the past, preserving languages and folk customs; in reimagining its buildings and in collecting and wearing historical clothing, arms and armour. All of this underlines his commitment to sensory engagement with the past, the most critical aspect of living history as we understand it today. Scott also had the foresight the appreciate that the present is merely history in the making, and he encouraged his friends to draw parallels between contemporary events and those in times past, using his home and collection as a springboard. Ultimately, through the costumed splendour of the Waverley Balls and King George IV's visit to reenactments of his novels on the stage, Scott gave birth to the version of living history we might recognise today.

Wellbeing

'Wood, water and wilderness have an inexpressible charm for me.' This is more than just the romantic sentiment of a poet: Scott knew that to live well, and to safeguard mental and physical wellbeing, a person should always be able to access and enjoy the natural world.

The benefits of physical activity and open air, and the opportunities for conversation and creativity that such activities offered to those taking part, were all championed by Scott two hundred years before they found their way into the health and social policy so topical today. Scott lived his life with a visible disability, but he and his social circle placed the emphasis on what he could do rather than what he couldn't, and it was never permitted to define him. His life at times was far from easy, and he weathered the stings of bereavement, financial hardship, depression and ill health with an indomitable spirit sustained by walking his woodlands and caring for his trees. Scott is one of very few nineteenthcentury figures to talk candidly about their mental health issues and coping mechanisms.

Belonging

Scott was deeply receptive to the stories and experiences of other cultures and times, so much so that he collected artefacts and studied materials from across the world. He was able to appreciate the bigger picture of the human story in unique and refreshing ways. And yet, he would always consider himself a Scottish Borderer, wedded to the land that was part of his creed and home to his reiver ancestors.

His baronial set celebrated his own roots and those of others descended from the people of the Borders, with Abbotsford as the metaphorical heart of the region. Throughout his writing career he endeavoured to show that a sense of place creates distinctive cultural identities, and that regional character and traditions can co-exist alongside one another to create a rich national tapestry.

Storytelling

Scott's greatest gift was his talent for storytelling. He was able to animate the past by blending history and fiction together, knitting the real and the imaginary with such mastery that sometimes his inventions have become accepted as historical truth. In his private life and social engagements, he was recognised for the same craft, and it was the dramatic tone of his voice, the animation of his face and the sparkle in his eye that enraptured his audiences.

To quote a contemporary, to hear Scott speak was like drinking champagne. His home is a three-dimensional example of his vast storytelling capabilities, where the antique, modern and imitation co-exist in unlikely harmony and decisions in design, decoration and craftsmanship are all intended to stimulate conversations, raise eyebrows and communicate messages on a number of levels.

Legacy

Sir Walter Scott is undoubtedly one of the most influential and relevant cultural figures of the last 200 years. His legacy still looms large in the spheres of architecture, international literature, tourism, lexicography, sustainability, biodiversity and landscape management. Right around the globe, there are places named after or connected with the man or his literary output. Scott's impact in architecture and the decorative arts was the catalyst for Medieval Revivalism and the Arts and Crafts movement.

His poems and novels put Scotland's landscapes and her people on the map. But his legacy is far greater than the sum of its parts. For a voice from the past, Scott speaks to us intelligently about a whole host of contemporary issues, from national identity and internationalism to gender equality, industrialisation and revolution. Scott was a historical writer who looked toward the future with his eyes wide open, embracing progress whilst fiercely protective of the social values he felt were under threat. In an uncertain world, his perspective and insight has never had so much to offer us.

IN SCOTLAND TODAY

HRH Duke of Edinburgh

Buckingham Palace has confirmed the death of His Royal Highness, Prince Philip, The Duke of Edinburgh, at the age of 99. First Minister Nicola Sturgeon has sent a message of condolence to Her Majesty The Queen following the announcement. Flags were flown at half-mast on Scottish Government buildings and online Books of Condolence were opened. The First Minister said: "On behalf of the people of Scotland, I would like to express my deepest sympathy to Her Majesty The Queen and the rest of the Royal Family. Our thoughts are with them at this difficult time and their grief is shared by people across the country. The Duke of Edinburgh had deep and longstanding ties to Scotland, attending school here at Gordonstoun and regularly holidaying at Balmoral Castle. From his patronage of The Duke of Edinburgh's Award Scheme, to his close association with the University of Edinburgh as Chancellor for over fifty years and his commitments to countless charities and organisations, Prince Philip's long contribution to public life in Scotland will leave a profound mark on its people."

Reservists from 105 Regiment, Royal Artillery carried out a 41-gun salute from Edinburgh Castle in honour of the Duke of Edinburgh, who was Queen Elizabeth II's husband of 73 years.

People make Glasgow

Scotland's largest city has recently been voted the friendliest city in the world. The poll undertaken by travel publisher Rough Guides, placed Glasgow at the top spot ahead of cities such as Dublin, Montreal, Tokyo, Vancouver, Melbourne, Wellington and Atlanta. Rough Guides describes Glasgow as: 'Set on the banks of the mighty River Clyde, Glasgow, Scotland's largest city, has not traditionally enjoyed the best of reputations. This former industrial giant changed its image irrevocably in 1990, however - when it energetically embraced its status as European City of Culture - and has continued to transform itself ever since, with the most recent feather in its cap being the hosting of the Commonwealth

Games in 2014. The cityscape has been spruced up, and many visitors are knocked out by the architecture, from long rows of sandstone terraces to the fantastical spires of the Kelvingrove Museum. Glasgow is without doubt, in its own idiosyncratic way, a cultured, vibrant and irrepressibly sociable place that's well worth getting to know.' The poll was taken using Rough Guides social media followers and it is the second time that Rough Guides readers have given Glasgow the top spot, having been awarded the accolade in 2014.

Real-life stories wanted for North-East granite industry oral history project

Aberdeen City Heritage Trust has launched a Granite Oral History Project to capture the memories and experiences of those who worked in or were in families associated with the area's granite industry. Granite has defined the character of Aberdeen and towns and villages in Aberdeenshire since it was first used. Industrial scale quarrying started in the 18th century with the industry reaching its heyday in the 19th century when granite was used to pave streets, form harbours and embankments, build buildings and for funerary monuments.

In addition to high status buildings such as Marischal College or the Townhouse, granite was used to build much of a rapidly expanding Aberdeen in the 1800s and continued in use well into the 20th century. It was exported across the UK and the globe giving Aberdeen its world-wide reputation as the "Granite City". The main period of quarrying in the area came to an end in the early 1970s although its legacy lives on in some local businesses. Aberdeen City Heritage Trust's vision is that Aberdeen's historic environment will be better understood, conserved, used and celebrated.

Capturing some of the real-life history behind Aberdeen and Aberdeenshire's granite industry will help to create a better understanding of the human dimension behind this ubiquitous material; an industry which carries with it a fantastic reputation for hard work, skilled craftsmanship and engineering expertise. The Trust is particularly interested in connecting with those with first-hand experience of granite quarrying, processing, tooling, carving, memorial work, business, administration and distribution of granite and its associated trades. If individuals or family members were personally involved in the industry in some way in the past and are happy to share that memory or story, the Trust would be delighted to hear from them.

The Lord Provost of Aberdeen, Barney Crockett said: "The City of Aberdeen is known around the world for a great many wonderful things, one of which is granite. It is why Aberdeen is often referred to as the Granite City or the Silver City - due to the reflective elements found in the grey granite. The oral history project is a great way to capture the experiences and stories of those who worked in the industry in their own words and I would encourage anyone who has an interesting story to tell to share it with the Trust so it can help provide a fascinating insight in industrial and social terms for us now and for future generations." For further information, please contact the Trust by emailing: info@aberdeenheritage.org.uk

Bumblebee Conservation Trust asks people to Bee the Change

The Stirling-based Bumblebee Conversation Trust is on a mission to help everyone Bee the Change in their local area, with a new campaign asking people across Scotland and the UK to take simple, quick micro-actions to make their postcode more bumblebee-friendly. Bumblebees are familiar and much-loved insects that pollinate our crops and wildflowers. But bumblebees are in trouble and need our help. Over the past century our landscape has lost millions of the flowers they rely on to survive. Through the campaign, people will pledge to Bee the Change and carry out quick and simple micro-actions like spotting nearby bumblebees, growing beefriendly plants, creating wild bumblebee havens, and spreading the #BeeTheChange message with their friends, families and local communities. Throughout 2021, the Bumblebee Conservation Trust will supply downloadable free resources and how-to guides helping everyone to Bee the Change wherever they live. Anyone can take part, whether they live in the city or the countryside, and whether they have a garden, a flowerpot or no outdoor space at all. Gill Perkins, Chief Executive of the Bumblebee Conservation Trust, said: "We know that many people want to take small, easy action ideas to help bumblebees but perhaps don't know where to start or are worried they don't have enough time. We want to make it easy for everyone to get involved. The Bee the Change resources on our website help anyone make the small changes that add up to a big difference to bumblebees. Together we can save the sound of summer, wherever we live."

HMS Queen Elizabeth visits Western Scotland for the first time

The Royal Navy's Fleet Flagship, HMS Queen Elizabeth, arrived in Glen Mallan, Scotland, as part of final preparations before her first operational deployment. Sailing in along the Firth of Clyde, the 65,000 tonne aircraft carrier has spent two weeks at sea testing and trialling her latest equipment, before berthing at the new Northern Ammunition Jetty for a routine onload of operational stores. HMS Queen Elizabeth is the first of the Royal Navy's fleet to visit the new £64 million facility, built by the Defence Infrastructure Organisation. Captain Angus Essenhigh, HMS Queen Elizabeth Commanding Officer, said: "We are very proud of the close connection our ship has with Scotland, especially with our affiliated city of Edinburgh. HMS Queen Elizabeth embodies the best of British engineering and craftsmanship, including Scottish shipbuilding, and it is a privilege to return to her birthplace of Scotland."

This is the first time HMS Queen Elizabeth has visited Western Scotland, after she initially became a familiar sight on the River Forth where she was assembled. HMS Queen Elizabeth is now in Portsmouth, and will deploy to the Mediterranean, Indian Ocean and East Asia later this year, as part of the UK's Carrier Strike Group.

Edinburgh's historic Granton Station set to be restored

The Edwardian B-listed former Granton Station, set in the heart of the city's planned new sustainable Granton Waterfront district, is to be restored by the Council at a cost of up to £4.75m. Work will commence to bring the historic former Granton Station building back into use by early 2022 as a high-quality creative workspace and the derelict land in front of the building will once again be used as a public square for community events and recreation to be enjoyed by residents and visitors to the area. The station site is part of Granton Waterfront, a key sustainable £1.3bn regeneration project for Scotland, which will make a significant contribution to Edinburgh's target to become a net zero carbon city by 2030.

Cllr Rob Munn, Convener of the Finance and Resources Committee, said: "Granton Station is an important link to the rich industrial heritage of the area, and I look forward to seeing it back in use once again. As it did in Edwardian times, the building will serve the local community but now as a vibrant and modern business hub with open public space outside for everyone to enjoy."

International Tartan Day

1, Nationwide

Celebrated on July 1, the anniversary of the Repeal Proclamation of 1782 annulling the Act of Proscription of 1747, which had made wearing tartan an offense punishable. Wear some tartan today with pride!

The Scottish Banner is pleased to be offering the Tartan of the Month series highlighting a variety of different, unique and colourful tartans from around the world which are registered with the Scottish Register of Tartans in Edinburgh. The Scottish Register of Tartans was established by an act of the Scottish Parliament in November 2008 and promotes and preserves information about historic and contemporary tartans from Scotland and throughout the world. Text and image use are courtesy of the Scottish Register of Tartans (SRT).

ay is whisky month so this month we raise our glass to celebrate Scotch Whisky, national drink, fondly referred to as 'the Water of Life'. It is intended to represent the origin story of Scotch (the first written record of whisky production in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland 1st June 1494), and the Tironensian Grey Monks of Lindores Abbey who distilled the spirit for the first time in history. The design is also intended to reflect the amber hues and tones of Scotch whisky, as it sparkles in the glass. This is the third interpretation of the designer's creation of the Scotch Whisky tartan; the sett and colours were adapted from the original Scotch Whisky tartan reference #11686, which itself was inspired by the Angels' Share tartan reference SRT ref:11497. Refer to these two preceding tartans for the expanded rationale within the weave.

This tartan (SRT ref: 12974) was designed by Mr Steven Patrick Sim, The Tartan Artisan, and registered in November 2020. Slainte Mhath!

Whisky flapjacks

Ingredients:

55g/2oz. oats 2 eggs, beaten 55g/2oz. self-raising flour 55g/2oz. caster sugar vegetable oil 1 miniature whisky To serve: 2 segments orange fresh mint sprig

Method:

Mix together the main ingredients, except the oil and whisky, and shape into three patties. Heat a pan with a drop of oil and fry for two minutes on each side. Add the whisky to the pan, warm and carefully set alight to flambé for a few seconds. Serve on a warm plate with the orange segments and mint sprig.

Whisky chicken

Ingredients:

2 skinless, boneless chicken breast halves - cut into 1/2 pieces 2 tablespoons soy sauce ¼ teaspoon garlic powder 1 cup pineapple juice 3 tablespoons bourbon whisky ¼ teaspoon ground black pepper 1 tablespoon brown sugar

Method:

Sauté the chicken in a large pan over medium high heat until cooked through (no longer pink). In a small bowl, combine the soy sauce, garlic powder, pineapple juice, whiskey, pepper and sugar. Stir until sugar is dissolved and pour over chicken. Let simmer for 10 to 15 minutes, or until sauce is thickened to taste.

Whisky sauce

Ingredients

2 shallots, roughly sliced 1 celery stick, roughly sliced 2 tsp light olive oil
4 fresh thyme sprigs
1 fresh bay leaf
100ml/3½fl oz chicken stock
400ml/1½ pints double cream
70ml/2½fl oz good Scotch whisky
2 tsp wholegrain mustard
1 tbsp Dijon mustard sea salt and freshly ground white pepper

Method:

Place a large saucepan over a medium heat and cook the shallots and celery in the olive oil. Fry gently for 5 minutes, stirring occasionally, without colouring the vegetables.

Add the thyme and bay to the pan, taking care as they might crackle a little, then stir and cook for 2 minutes.

Pour in the chicken stock and reduce the liquid by half. This should take about 5 minutes.

Stir in the cream and then gently simmer the mixture for 20 minutes, reducing the liquid by one third. Take care not to let it boil and stir every couple of minutes.

Remove the sauce from the heat and strain it through a sieve into a clean pan, discarding the cooked vegetables and herbs.

Place the sauce back on the heat and stir in the whisky along with both types of mustard. Cook for a further 5 minutes before seasoning with salt and white pepper to taste and serving.

Archaeology which has changed the face of Scotland's warrior kingdoms scoops prestigious award ioneering work led by the University of Aberdeen, which has revealed a new picture of Scotland's Pictish past, has won Current Archaeology's prestigious Research Project of the Year award for 2021. The problem of the Picts: searching for a lost people in northern Scotland was selected through a public vote at the awards celebrating the people and projects judged to have made outstanding contributions to archaeology.

Mysterious people

Since 2012, the research team led by Professor Gordon Noble has been building a very different picture of the early societies of northern Britain given the name 'Picti' - meaning 'Painted Ones' - by the Romans, to that traditionally presented in popular accounts. The Picts have long been regarded as a mysterious people, leaving behind little evidence of their presence other than their iconic carved stones and so their image in popular culture has at times been of a wild warrior tribe of painted people. Excavations as part of the Northern Picts project since 2012 have shown the Picts to have been a much more sophisticated society, trading across Europe and creating large, hierarchical settlements.

At Tap o' Noth, an imposing hill which rises above the village of Rhynie to the north of Aberdeen, the team made their most spectacular find yet. In 2020, using radiocarbon dating and aerial photography, they uncovered evidence which indicates that thousands of people may have lived in more than 800 huts perched close to the summit, rivalling the largest known post-Roman settlements in Britain and Ireland. This built on the picture they began unravelling in the valley below at Rhynie where eight years ago they found evidence for the drinking of Mediterranean wine, the use of glass vessels from western France and intensive metalwork production at a site at Barflat farm, just to the south of the village. The finds suggest it was a high-status site, possibly even with royal connections.

Trying to put the Picts on the archaeological map

Other finds were made at the precarious Dunnicaer sea stack close to the iconic Dunnottar Castle near Stonehaven.

The rocky outcrop, which could only be accessed with the help of experienced mountaineers, was identified as the oldest Pictish fort ever discovered, dating back as far as the third or fourth centuries, with implications for the dating of the Pictish symbol stones found there.

While at Burghead, the largest Pictish fort previously known in Scotland, they found evidence of longhouses, Anglo Saxon coins of Alfred the Great and complex feats of engineering which were used to construct enormous defensive ramparts.

These finds, together with their work on the Picts' most famous legacy - their system of symbols - has radically altered the accepted face of Scotland's warrior kingdoms. Professor Noble said: "It was a great honour to be nominated, let alone win. Our project has been about trying to put the Picts on the archaeological map, and winning this award is testament to the fact that we have succeeded to some extent. But there's much we can do in the coming years to ensure that progress continues. Since we began our work on northern Picts in 2012, we have uncovered ever-increasing evidence of Pictish society through large-scale excavations of the scale hitherto rarely undertaken. These have begun to underline the importance of northern Pictland and north-east Scotland to the establishment of the first kingdoms of Scotland. For too long this period of Scotland's history has been a particularly poorly illuminated part of the so-called Dark Ages. Our work is shedding new light on this and engaging people in new ways with our Pictish past. We are delighted that our work on the Picts has been recognised by Current Archaeology with this award and particularly that people got behind us with their votes."

- The Islay malts are generally described as having a peaty or smoky character derived from the water and peating levels of the barley. The island malts are known for being powerful, flavourful and full of character.
- The Campbeltown characteristics include a defined dryness with a pungency, smoke and a solid salinity with a pinch of salt.
- Traditionally Lowland single malts are triple distilled, often giving them a lighter taste. These whiskies are famed for their malty, zesty flavours and subtle hints of citrus.
- The Highlands are the largest whisky region in terms of size, covering a vast area and diverse range of distilleries. Whiskies made here are known for a heavier and drier character, with hints of nut, honey and heather.
- Though small, Speyside has almost half of the total number of distilleries in Scotland and is consequently officially recognised as a distinct region.

 Whiskies produced here are known for being elegant and refined, with subtle nutty and fruity notes, including apple, pear, honey, vanilla and spice.
