'Coastodians' of Scotland's Solway Coast

by Sean Cairney

n the southwest border between Scotland and England lies the stunning Solway Coast. The Solway Firth hugs the Dumfries & Galloway coastline and is the third largest estuary in the UK, which was listed in 1964 as a Special Area of Conservation, and boasts coastal dunes, salt marshes, raised mires and agricultural land.

The region is home to an abundant variety of wildlife and is rich in natural heritage. The area is certainly one of the lesser visited parts of Scotland and those who are lucky enough to explore the region, just over 2 hours from Glasgow, can take in so much natural wonders from sea cliffs and sandy beaches to sheltered coves and also visit Scotland's most Southerly point the Mull of Galloway. Visitors to Scotland can take in the region by driving the South West Coastal 300, one of the country's newest driving routes.

Nature takes centre stage

Dumfries and Galloway is home to Scotland's last wild native oyster fishery on Loch Ryan and people have harvested the native oyster for centuries. Sadly, native oyster beds have declined by 95% in the UK since the 19th century. The region also has 25% of Scotland's saltmarshes, which are rich in food for both bird and marine life. Nature takes centre stage in this part of southern Scotland and the unique seascape needs to be protected for future generations to enjoy.

This diverse and stunning 210mile stretch of precious coastline and coastal waters will benefit from a ten-year large-scale funding awarded to SCAMP (Solway Coast and Marine Project) by The National Lottery Heritage Fund Landscape Connections. Up to £8million will be used to create 120 miles of new coastal trails which will be created to improve and better link the existing coastal path network, while also making the paths more accessible for more users of varying abilities.

Ten coastal gateway sites will also be enhanced; these improved facilities will allow more people to take in and learn about the incredible Solway Firth and greater coastline. Five key habitats will be targeted for improvements including seagrass meadows, native oyster reef, saltmarsh, coastal woodland and sand dunes.

Protecting our natural heritage

Not only in Scotland but across the world protecting our natural heritage is so very important. As climate change causes impacts to communities and economies, helping our planet whilst celebrating the beauty of this part of Scotland is a huge win for the region.

The Solway Firth has played a role in shaping Scotland's history, biodiversity, economy and culture, as a gateway to the world and an important natural resource. With rising sea levels and storm surges taking place across the globe as well as natural heritage under threat both on land and under the water we need to protect or coastal regions and take on nature-based solutions to make sure our seascape, and the communities which live amongst them, thrive well into the future.

The Solway Coast is the first area in the UK to benefit from The National Lottery Heritage Fund's Landscape Connections, and this is a testament to the rich, diverse and precious natural region this part of Scotland has. I look forward to learning how these projects will benefit the Solway land and seascape and hope many more of us get to experience this great region for years, and generations, to come.

On Thursday 22nd May 1975 PS (Paddle Steamer) Waverley carried her very first passengers in her new career operating for her own company -Waverley Steam Navigation Co Ltd. Waverley originally entered service in 1947 and is without doubt one of Scotland's most famous vessels. This year marks 50 incredible years since the world's last seagoing paddle steamer was preserved and saved for generations of Scots to enjoy. We are so thrilled to have Douglas McGowan MBE, who has been instrumental in the ship's longevity and shares some of the history and his relentless passion with us.

Thousands of years ago the powerful and mighty Romans thought Scotland, or Caledonia, was literally at the end of the world. But did they ever conquer the lands which we all know, and love, as Scotland? This month we look at some of the history of the Roman invasions of Scotland and what impact they had and the story they left behind.

Argyll has a long history in whisky production, going all the way back to the 17th century. The area is home to 15 world class distilleries which celebrate the regions rich whisky heritage, which was once known as the 'whisky capital of the world'. The region's fertile soil, extensive peat bogs, and pure water—create ideal conditions for crafting exceptional whisky and I am sure many will say cheers to that!

Edinburgh's Floral Clock celebrates 200 years of braille

he Lord Provost of Edinburgh has officially opened the newly completed Floral Clock in Edinburgh's West Princes Street Gardens. This year, the landmark celebrates the Royal National Institute of Blind People (RNIB) and 200 years of braille, the tactile code that enables blind and partially sighted people to read by touch.

The Lord Provost was joined by representatives from RNIB and visually impaired members of the community to mark the completion of the new design, which takes three gardeners six weeks to create. More than 35,000 flowers and plants are used in the clock, which will be in bloom until October. This includes plants like antennaria, crassula, echevaria, sedum and saxifrage and annuals such as pyrethrum, begonias and geraniums.

Edinburgh's Lord Provost Robert Aldridge said: "Seeing the floral clock take shape is a wonderful annual tradition and this year doesn't disappoint, with a beautiful display in honour of a worthwhile cause. The RNIB provides essential support to blind and visually impaired people, and in 2025 they mark a real milestone with the 200th anniversary of braille. I hope the clock's design will give people pause to reflect on just how important braille is to all those to use it. Thanks to the hard-working parks team who have spent the past six weeks creating the clock, which will be enjoyed by many thousands of people throughout summer."

The 200th anniversary of the invention of braille

The RNIB is the UK's leading sight loss charity which offers practical and emotional support to blind and partially sighted people, their families and carers.

This year, the RNIB is marking the 200th anniversary of the invention of braille, a code based on six dots used to represent the alphabet and numbers James Adams, Director of RNIB Scotland, added: "It is a great honour that RNIB has been chosen for this year's floral clock. It marks the 200th anniversary of the invention of braille which opened up opportunity for blind and partially sighted people to be able to access the written word, and with that came the liberation of being able to also receive information that is taken for granted by wider society. Braille is a system that endures, and continues to transform the lives of blind and partially sighted people, offering them privacy, independence, and opportunity. RNIB was brought into existence to improve tactile literacy and we still work every day to widen access for blind and partially sighted people. Therefore, we are delighted to have Braille200 so prominently marked in the heart of Edinburgh and give everyone the opportunity to celebrate braille and include accessibility in their lives.'

The Floral Clock was first created in 1903 by then Edinburgh Parks Superintendent, John McHattie, and is the oldest of its kind in the world. It initially operated with just an hour hand, with a minute hand added in 1904, followed by a cuckoo clock in 1952. Until 1972 the clock was operated mechanically and had to be wound daily. Since 1946 it has been designed in honour of various organisations and individuals, including the Girl Guides Association, Robert Louis Stevenson and the Queen, for her Golden Jubilee. In the clock's centenary year in 2003 it won a Gold Medal at the RHS Chelsea Flower Show.

Rare historical prisoner photos and records now online ase notes of patients in Victorian Scotland's only prison unit for offenders with mental illnesses have gone online. Perth Prison had Scotland's only department for people who were both prisoners and patients. The records for patients admitted between 1846 and 1902 are now on the Scotland's People website. There are case notes available for over 400 prisoner-patients, some of which include photographs.

Some of the cases involve serious crimes, including murder. These records could be upsetting for some readers. The language used in the records reflects the attitudes of the time. National Records of Scotland Chief Executive Alison Byrne said: "These records preserve important aspects of our history. They document how ordinary lives could unravel, often with devastating consequences. They show how doctors understood and treated mental illness in Victorian times. We are making these records available on Scotland's People to widen access to more researchers."

Records of over 900 Perth Prison general population admissions for the years 1922-1924 are also now available online.

Read more about Perth Prison's history or search the records at the Scotland's People website: www.scotlandspeople.gov.uk

Ever wanted to know what happened to your old pal from home, how to make your favourite Scottish meal, or wondered about a certain bit of Scottish history?

Lochranza Castle, Isle of Arran

Lochranza Castle was originally built in the 13th century, likely by the MacSween's, and later came under the control of the powerful Stewart family. It played a key role in local power struggles and clan disputes over the centuries. In the 1490s, James IV used the castle during his campaign to suppress the rebellious Lords of the Isles. Later, it became the property of the Hamilton's, one of Scotland's most influential noble families. The castle's position on Arran made it a valuable asset for controlling access to the western seas, and it was frequently caught up in the shifting alliances and rivalries between clans and the crown.

Call for Wallace Day

We, the Society of William Wallace, call upon the Scottish Government to officially recognise the 23rd of August as Wallace Day. A National Day of Remembrance and celebration in honour of Sir William Wallace, one of Scotland's most iconic figures in the struggle for freedom. Sir William Wallace was executed on the 23rd of August 1305 for leading the fight for Scotland's independence. His courage, sacrifice, and unyielding commitment to Scottish sovereignty have echoed through centuries and remain an enduring symbol of national pride and resilience. While monuments, books, and films have kept his memory alive, there is no formal day set aside to honour the man who became a cornerstone of Scotland's national identity.

Why Wallace Day matters:

- It offers a moment of reflection on Scotland's long and hard-fought journey.
- It encourages historical education and civic pride, particularly among young Scots.
- It provides a focal point for cultural events, heritage tourism, and local community gatherings.
- It unites Scots across political and cultural lines around shared values of courage, resistance to oppression, and national dignity.

By officially recognising Wallace Day, Scotland would take a meaningful step toward preserving and celebrating its rich heritage—ensuring future generations understand and honour the sacrifices that shaped the nation we know today.

Let us mark August 23rd not just as a date of martyrdom, but as a National Day of Remembrance, unity, and inspiration. Please sign the petition at: www.change. org/p/wallace-day The Society of William Wallace

Clan Estate sale under Trust

Feelings of disbelief, betrayal, sadness resonate among those in the Sleat community on the Isle of Skye and Clan Donald members worldwide with the unexpected decision by trustees and CEO of Clan Donald Lands Trust. The Clan Donald Lands Trust, which owns a large estate on the Isle of Skye, including Armadale Castle, has recently announced the sale of its land and property assets, including Armadale Castle and the Sleat Estate. The estate covers much of the island's southern Sleat peninsula, comprising about 20,000 acres. This decision, made due to the trustee's claim of financial challenges and their reliance on charitable grants that have recently been withdrawn, has been met with protests and criticism from local communities and Clan Donald members from Canada, Australia, Germany and the U.S. as well as worldwide. The sale came as an unpleasant surprise to both people living in the south of Skye, and those abroad affiliated with the many Clan Donald Associations, who have criticised the lack of involvement of the very people they have been vested with preserving the trust for in the decision.

Trustees blamed a large increase in the costs of running and maintaining Armadale, in a statement, the board of trustees said: "Due to the high-cost, low-income nature of Armadale, we have always been reliant on external grant funding to cover our operating costs. On the Armadale website, they make the comment that the "visitor business has never been viable." The Trust said it wanted to focus on giving grants to "Clan and indigenous Highland heritage projects." And most recently stating; "The Trustees' objective is to find suitable buyers who will bring serious investment, prosperity, training, and employment to the community for the long term,...The CDLT will at the proper time expand on exciting plans for a more engaging, efficient, affordable, and internationally purposeful Clan Donald HQ, which of course could still be on Skye".

The lands, properties, museum, and castle have been in trust since 1971 by the Clan Donald Lands Trust. This charity was formed by clan members from around the world, who gave of their own funds, following the death of Clan Chief Alexander Godfrey Macdonald, the 7th Lord Macdonald. The current High Chief of Clan Donald, 8th Baron Macdonald, Lord Godfrey James Macdonald of Macdonald has stated; "I believe the proposed sale of the Clan Donald Centre would be both a tragedy for the Clan and for the local community. There is absolutely no doubt that the beneficiaries of the original trust are the clan pure and simple."

It has been widely agreed that the retention of Armadale Castle, Clan Donald Heritage Center and Gardens is of most importance to many people who feel a deep connection to their MacDonald heritage and most do not agree with the trustee's posted comment regarding "non-viability". They see the trustee's actions over several years' time as having contributed to the situation they claim they are now in and feel they are very out of touch with their responsibilities to the trust, and to all who claim connection to Clan Donald, as a whole.

In response to the appalling actions of the Trust, a global Save Armadale - The Clan Donald Campaign has been formed to counter the sale of Armadale Castle, Gardens, Museum, Cafe, and Visitor Centre, to resist the dismantling of the Clan Donald Heritage Archive, Museum, Estate Lands, and Genealogy Centre and to call for the removal of the current trustees who are not Scottish residents. A GoFundMe campaign has been started to Save Armadale, visit: https://gofund.me/b1e8958e The Trustees have already sold Kingsburgh House, a property that was willed to the trust by Miss Amelia Colbourne. Edinburgh International Festival breaks boundaries in a year exploring 'The Truth We Seek'

his August Edinburgh International Festival presents a hand-picked selection of leading international and local artists in the world's Festival
City, with 24 days of world-class opera, dance, music and theatre. The Festival's 2025 programme offers opportunities to experience world-class artists in thought-provoking and unconventional ways – including an eight-hour choral extravaganza, a distinctive outdoor promenade dance piece and a circus infused opera. Audiences can also get involved in many Festival performances, from an outdoor mass-singalong to interactive concerts where the audience chooses the repertoire. Two major world premiere productions in UK theatre and dance: Make It Happen, an eye-opening take on the 2008 financial crisis set in Edinburgh, starring Brian Cox and Mary, Queen of Scots, an iconic story of one of Scotland's most famous women, that blends classicism with modernity. In a landmark year for choral music, marking the 60th anniversary of the Edinburgh Festival Chorus, this renowned chorus of singers from around Scotland performs at the monumental Opening Concert.

Now in its third year under Festival Director and celebrated Scottish violinist Nicola Benedetti, the 2025 programme welcomes over 1,700 artists from 42 nations to Edinburgh —including 600 from Scotland—across 133 performances. The Truth We Seek is the theme underpinning the 2025 Edinburgh International Festival, inviting audiences to explore their relationship with truth - within themselves, between one another and in understanding our place in the world.

The world's Festival City

Nicola Benedetti, Festival Director, Edinburgh International Festival said: "Our 2025 Edinburgh International Festival invites you to explore The Truth We Seek—a journey into the elusive nature of truth, in our personal and public lives. In an era of 'alternative facts' and manipulated narratives, the arts offer us something deeper: a poetic and metaphorical wisdom that is both more nuanced and more precise. This Festival born in the city of the Enlightenmenthas championed artistic expression as a means of discovery, insight, and mutual understanding. This year, we proudly present seven world premieres, exceptional international and Scottish artists, and celebrate 60 years of our Festival Chorus as well as the brightest emerging talent. Join us this summer as we seek and find truth together. Your curiosity will be rewarded with thought-provoking, and potentially transformational, experiences that you simply won't find anywhere else."

Edinburgh International Festival is the original festival. It's the one that started it all, the igniting spark that established Edinburgh as the world's Festival City. The Edinburgh International Festival was founded in 1947, the inspired idea of Rudolf Bing, a cultural pioneer and Jewish refugee, working with a group of civic and artistic leaders. Together, they created a festival that transcends political boundaries through a global celebration of the performing arts. Over the following 77 years the International Festival's hand-picked programme of world-leading dance, opera, music and theatre has continued to bring people of different cultures and viewpoints together every August.

Meanwhile, the International Festival's sister festivals have grown up around it – each of them contributing to the atmosphere of unparalleled excitement that transforms the city each summer. Shining far beyond what you see on stage, the International Festival also offers yearround pathways for people of all ages and backgrounds to discover and participate in live performance.

The Edinburgh International Festival takes place from 1-24 August 2025, at venues across the city. Learn more at: www.eif.co.uk.

Summer archives exhibition explores history of railway tourism new exhibition at National Records of Scotland will explore how the birth of the railways transformed the country. Scots on the Move: Railways and Tourism in Victorian Scotland is part of the Edinburgh Fringe Festival, running between 4-29 August 2025. Held in General Register House's spectacular Adam Dome on Princes Street, the exhibition will be free and open to all.

Drawing on Scotland's national archives, the exhibition will transport visitors to the dawn of the steam era. It starts before the first passenger railway in the early 19th century and ends with the rise of the motor car over a century later.

An exciting moment in Scotland's history

The exhibition will capture moments which changed Scotland forever. Spectacular viaducts and grand stations sprang up as remote communities became connected. The period also saw the birth of iconic rail routes including the West Highland Line. Before railways, journeys were a battle against harsh terrain and weather.

Now everyone could travel, from day trips down the Clyde to luxury Highland holidays.

Visitors will follow the evolution of the train from Stephenson's 'Rocket' to Queen Victoria's royal carriages.

The exhibition will also explore how Victorians felt about railways. Fears over the changing landscape mixed with exciting freedoms and a brand new industry: tourism. Items on display chart the development of the railway across the century including tourist guides and booklets, posters and letters.

Alison Byrne, Chief Executive of National Records of Scotland said: "Our summer exhibition will capture an exciting moment in Scotland's history. Railways normalised travel and shaped holiday habits which we still recognise today. It will be a great opportunity for visitors to take a peek inside Scotland's national archive and sample some of the history that National Records of Scotland preserves for current and future generations."

Scotspeak is a selection of quotes which made headlines in Scotland last month on a variety of current Scottish affairs.

"Road safety is a key priority for us and I'm glad that we're moving ahead with this important process. Whilst this has taken longer than we initially anticipated, I'm confident that these measures will make many of our roads across the city safer. The evidence is clear - lower speed limits make roads safer for everyone. A pedestrian or cyclist has twice the chance of surviving a collision at 30mph compared to 40mph. Any action that we can take to make sure all road users are safer is a positive step."

Edinburgh Transport and Environment Convener, Councillor Stephen Jenkinson said a 40mph to 30mph speed limit reduction implementation has begun across the city. The 19 roads in Edinburgh due to have their speed limit cut will be rolled out throughout June and July.

"Summer strike action looms over Edinburgh and Glasgow airports because the pay offers on the table from Menzies Aviation aren't good enough. Menzies Aviation has the ability to improve its offers and they can easily resolve this pay dispute without any disruption to the travelling public.

If the company fail to table a better offer to our members, Unite will have no option but to ballot our members for strikes over the summer holidays."

Industrial officer Carrie Binnie said strike action could be possible at Scotland's two largest airports over the busy summer season. Approximately 300 Menzies Aviation work at each airport and have rejected current pay offers.

"Scotland's coastline offers something for everyone – from the historic streets of St Andrews to the island charm of Rothesay and Millport. While some of the most sought-after locations continue to command premium prices, there are still plenty of affordable options for buyers willing to look beyond the traditional hotspots. Coastal property prices in Scotland have risen over the past year, reflecting strong demand and the enduring appeal of seaside living. But it's also important to recognise the diversity of these communities – while some are thriving, others face real challenges linked to housing affordability, seasonal economies and access to services."

Isla Benzie, Head of Bank of Scotland Mortgages, said Scotland's most expensive place to buy a home by the sea is St Andrews, with an average property price of £458,381. St Andrews is one of Scotland's most famous and desirable towns, internationally renowned as the birthplace of golf and home to Scotland's oldest university.

"A very special bird who had touched the hearts of millions who saw her both on TV and in the wild. As Frisa got on in years, I dreaded the day I would visit her territory and find her gone. Sadly, that day has come and I feel like I've lost a friend. She was a true icon for White-tailed Eagles and she'll always hold a special place in my heart."

Royal Society for the Protection of Birds Ambassador Dave Sexton, said that Frisa, the UK's oldest wild White-tailed Eagle, has died aged 32. Frisa appeared on TV shows and raised several chicks on Mull. Frisa long term partner Skye is now the oldest wild Whitetailed Eagle in the UK at the age of 31.

"With the City Deal we're quite literally building bridges between our communities along the Clyde. Our expectations that the Govan-Partick Bridge would reconnect these historic communities have been exceeded with these fantastic figures. It's quickly became a key landmark in the city and a tremendously well-used travel route and will be critical to the continuing regeneration of our riverside and its surrounding communities in the years to come."

Councillor Susan Aitken, Leader of Glasgow City Council and Chair of the Glasgow City Region Cabinet, said the Govan - Partick Bridge in Glasgow has been a tremendous success, with more than one million pedestrian and cyclist crossings since opening on 7 September 2024. The Glasgow City Region City Deal project, the Scottish and UK Governments each provided £12.685 million in funding for the Bridge, re-established the historic connection between Govan and Partick. One of the longest opening pedestrian/cycle bridges in Europe, the Govan - Partick Bridge has a width of six metres and two spans.

"Scotland was the first nation in the UK to commit to taking action on single use vapes. It's estimated that over half of disposable vapes are incorrectly disposed of each year in Scotland – creating a fire risk and littering our beautiful environment. They also contain nicotine which is highly addictive. This change to the law fulfils a Programme for Government commitment and will help tackle the threat that single-use vapes pose to our environment as well as to our public health."

Scotland's Acting Net Zero Secretary Gillian Martin said single-use vapes will no longer be stocked or sold in Scotland under new legislation which came into force on June 1St. The UK-wide ban has been introduced to prevent the environmental damage disposable vapes cause and to address health concerns associated with vaping as Scotland moves towards a tobacco-free generation by 2034. An estimated 26 million disposable vapes were thrown away in Scotland in 2023.

"It is a tremendous privilege and honour for the Royal Navy to be granted the unique opportunity, for the first time in history, to mount the ceremonial guard at both Edinburgh Castle and the Palace of Holyroodhouse. These men and women, having so proudly represented the Royal Navy during the VE Day commemorations, now carry that same sense of duty and pride into the heart of Edinburgh. This historic moment follows a remarkable period in which the Royal Navy took centre stage as the lead service at the Royal Edinburgh Military Tattoo – another proud chapter in our enduring relationship with the city and its traditions."

Warrant Officer 1 Glynn Moffat, the Royal Navy's State Ceremonial Training Officer, said recently sailors from across the Royal Navy had the honour of guarding Edinburgh Castle and the Palace of Holyroodhouse for first time ever. The duty is normally carried out by British Army soldiers of The Royal Regiment of Scotland who traditionally guard the castle and Royal residence in their iconic tartan kilts and Glengarry headdress.

The world's biggest week of bagpipes returns to Glasgow with two iconic events

The newly imagined Piping Live! festival and World Pipe Band Championships are set to stage another summer spectacular showcasing the country's national instrument.

lasgow is preparing to host the world's biggest week of bagpipes this summer, with the return of Piping Live! from Monday 11th to Sunday 17th August, and The World Pipe Band Championships on Friday 15th and Saturday 16th August. Renowned as a UNESCO City of Music, the city is tuning up for the events that attract attendees and participants from across the globe.

The world's biggest piping festival

The world's biggest piping festival, Piping Live! - which is organised by The National Piping Centre and is now in its 22nd year - attracts over 30,000 attendees annually to Glasgow for an eclectic programme of entertaining events at venues across the city to celebrate the contemporary and traditional sounds of Scotland's national instrument. This year, organisers are proud to unveil a show-stopping reimagined outdoor ticketed space at their home on McPhater Street, complete with a Centre Stage, The Bothy (an acoustic tent) and other exciting new additions to the already hugely successful event that shines a global spotlight on Scotland.

Piping Live! Artistic Director, Finlay MacDonald, said: "We are very proud and delighted to present this year's edition of Piping Live! to the people of Glasgow and beyond. Thanks to the supporters, funders, performers, participants and attendees who continue to invest their time into our festival, we can continue building on our diverse, inclusive and engaging programme that showcases the breadth and depth of piping traditions and contemporary influences. This year, we are so looking forward to festival goers and performers experiencing our enchanting and newlyimagined festival site at McPhater Street. Expanding upon our popular Street Café, we know this new investment will allow us to bring an even wider variety of talent to Glasgow: with an array of emerging talent, international performers, live events and showcases planned for the festival's run. There are opportunities for pipers and spectators of all levels and ages – from 'come and try' sessions, high-level competitions, enjoying street performances or at our Big Band event - you don't have to be a piper to enjoy the wonders of Piping Live! The countdown is now on to August for when the city will be awash with the sounds of pipes and host to performers from every corner of the world."

This year's Piping Live! festival, which aims to be a celebration of diversity and culture in piping, is delighted to be welcoming pipers and performers from all walks of life to participate in its dynamic programme.

Across its seven-day run, it will offer everything from fierce competitions between globally recognised musicians, to captivating concerts, reel-y enchanting recitals and more – with musicians from Australia to Ukraine and everywhere in between, showcasing their talent and skills in the captivating offering of free and ticketed events - before the week comes to a fitting crescendo with The World Pipe Band Championships at Glasgow Green.

The pinnacle highlight of the international competitive pipe band calendar

Meanwhile, The World Pipe Band Championships – organised by The Royal Scottish Pipe Band Association and delivered by the city's culture and sport charity Glasgow Life – is an iconic event the city first hosted in 1948 and has staged every year since 1986. As the pinnacle highlight of the international competitive pipe band calendar, it attracts thousands of spectators from near and far every year to watch the world's best talent compete in the ultimate 'battle of the bands'.

Glasgow City Council Convenor for Culture, Sport and International Relations, and Chair of Glasgow Life, Bailie Annette Christie, said: "Scotland is renowned as the global home of piping, and Glasgow's reputation as a fantastic destination for music lovers is also recognised widely by its designation as a UNESCO City of Music. And with the city hosting both the world's biggest piping festival and the premier competitive pipe band event - there's definitely nowhere better to enjoy worldclass piping than Glasgow in August during the city's 850th birthday year. Offering great entertainment and memorable experiences celebrating our nation's culture, heritage and music, Piping Live! the World Pipe Band Championships are much-loved highlights of our city's cultural programme. Both events are very valued by Glasgow; they make a significant contribution to our visitor economy, attracting many thousands of pipers and spectators, as well as the attention of the world's media, to further enhance the city's profile. It's a pleasure and privilege for Glasgow to host these incredible piping extravaganzas, and we look forward to welcoming attendees from near and far this summer."

The World Pipe Band Championships - a much-loved event that's hugely popular with competitors, supporters and spectators alike - always attracts thousands of visitors to Glasgow to experience the stirring sights and sounds, and memorable atmosphere, of the event. Attendance at last year's premier pipes and drums showcase reached around 35,000 - with huge viewing figures online too - watching an impressive line-up of nations competing. That included countries as far afield as Australia, Oman and Hong Kong; the biggest contingent of bands (119) was from Scotland, the second largest was from Northern Ireland, and the third largest was from the USA.

Royal Scottish Pipe Band Association Chief Executive, Colin Mulhern, said: "The World Pipe Band Championships is an iconic event that is incredibly important to the global piping community. Bringing together in Glasgow the very best bands in the world, it's always spectacular and an unforgettable experience for competitors and spectators alike. Last year's Worlds saw 204 bands from 13 countries taking part, and more than 7,000 pipers and drummers taking to the field at Glasgow Green to compete in the ultimate 'battle of the bands'. We can certainly expect another wonderful showcase of piping and drumming at this year's event, with a hard-fought contest for all of the categories and of course, the title of this year's world champions. As always, tickets will be in great demand, so we'd encourage everyone planning to come along to book their tickets as soon as possible."

Piping Live! 2025 programme highlights – from Monday 11th to Sunday 17th August - are at www.pipinglive.co.uk.

More information on the World Pipe Band Championships 2025 – on Friday 15th and Saturday 16th August – is available from www.theworlds.co.uk.

hey came, they saw, but did they conquer? That's the first question on many peoples' minds when considering Rome's efforts to subdue Scotland. Pseudo-histories and long-busted myths still endure in the popular imagination, while even Scotland's foremost historians and archaeologists debate the extent and nature of Rome's brief but dramatic presence north of Hadrian's Wall.

Leading on from last month's summary of the history of Scottish castles, I'm here to put all our legionaries in a row when it comes to the fundamentals. When did they arrive? Why did they leave? Did Scotland truly remain unconquered by them? Read on for a crash course in the Roman invasions of Scotland. The first coordinated incursion into what is now Scotland occurred in 78 or 79AD under the Governor of Britannia, Gnaeus Julius Agricola, though scouting parties no doubt ranged north for several years before then.

As far back as Emperor Claudius' invasion of Britannia in 43AD, Roman navies circumnavigated the British mainland and reached even allegedly received submission from the king of Orkney.

The reach of Rome

Fresh from annihilating local druidic resistance in Wales, Agricola proceeded into southern Scotland to extend the reach of Rome to the limits of the known world. Beyond Britannia was, they believed, ultima thule, the most distant point on earth. If Rome could conquer Britannia, nowhere on earth would be beyond its grasp.

The campaign of the late 70s and early 80sAD saw the only large-scale pitched battle yet known between Romans and Caledonians. According to Tacitus, Agricola's son-in-law and biographer, it occurred at a place called Mons Graupius, the Graupian Mountain. A transcription error in the 15th century led to the Graupians being spelled to this day as the Grampians. This is the battle that gave us the Caledonian chieftain Calgacus' epic speech extolling the "last of the free" to defend their homeland against Roman tyranny – though Calgacus was almost certainly invented by Tacitus to give Agricola a worthy, named adversary.

No one knows precisely where this battle was fought, but Tacitus records that some 10,000 Caledonians were slain while fewer than 300 Roman auxiliaries fell. Propaganda aside, the Highland tribes were scattered but not wholly defeated. Their time for revenge would come. Meanwhile, Agricola fought an insurgency and never again managed to lure the locals into a pitched battle. Southern Scotland as far as the Tay had been secured for Rome and the tribes to the north had been cowed, but not for long.

The story of the Roman invasions of Scotland has captured imaginations for centuries.

The Antonine Wall

By 90AD all Roman forts north of the Forth-Clyde line were abandoned, as too were some major forts further south. Evidence from several forts show signs of burning, though whether this was done by Romans wishing to deny local tribes any spoiled or by the tribes themselves in anger, no one yet knows for sure. The legions returned within a few years though made no major progress until the late 130s and early 140s AD when the Antonine Wall was built, stretching from Bo'ness on the Forth to Old Kilpatrick on the Clyde.

The Antonine Wall was a major undertaking, comprising 17 forts with a total garrison of some 7,000 legionaries and auxiliaries. Significant remains can still be seen at Rough Castle in Falkirk, Croy Hill, and the bathhouse at Bearsden. It was occupied for only 20 years before the Romans had to withdraw south once more, though not before they dealt some devastating blows to the locals. A massive assault was orchestrated on the native hillfort of Burnswark near Lockerbie, with stone and bolt-throwing siege engines, massed slingers and archers, and thousands of legionaries arrayed against the Selgovae tribe on the hilltop. None were spared, a terrible lesson in the price of defying Rome's ambitions.

Another campaign was mounted in the 180s under the Emperor Commodus, though by the end of that decade many Roman forts from the Tay to the Tweed were again burnt – this time, almost certainly by native hands hoping to drive the invaders out forever. The final confirmed campaign of any scale came with the Emperor Septimius Severus and his sons, Caracalla and Geta, in 208-211AD. Severus gave Caracalla explicit orders to annihilate men, women, children, and animals alike, and archaeological evidence bears out that these orders were followed with ruthless comprehensiveness.

However, Severus' death in York in 211 halted the campaign, and Hadrian's Wall once again became Rome's northernmost frontier in Britannia. A possible campaign was mounted in the early 4th century, but no conclusive evidence for this has yet been found. So, far from never invading Scotland or making much progress in it, Rome mounted at least five major periods of campaigning which brought imperial troops as far north as the Moray Firth near Inverness. For those who believe that Rome under-invested in its northern invasions, in the late 2nd century AD 1 in 5 Roman soldiers in the entire empire were stationed in northern Britannia.

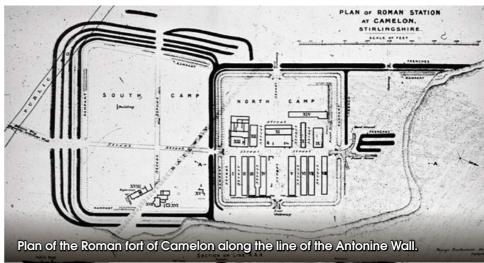

Military occupation

Their reasons for withdrawing are hotly debated to this day. Rome extracted raw materials from Scotland as well as countless enslaved people, but the area's riches were nothing like the silver veins of Iberia or the spice and salt roads of the eastern Mediterranean. Some argue that the Caledonians were simply too ferocious for the Romans, or that the Highland topography proved too challenging. Yet, Rome conquered equally warlike peoples in Germania, the Balkans, Cappadocia, and elsewhere, and met with even more challenging terrain in the form of the Pyrenees, North African deserts, and indeed among the Alpine Gauls in northern Italy.

There is simply no single answer or cause for why Rome failed to conquer Scotland, just as there is no single answer for why modern empires such as the United States or Soviet Union failed to conquer Afghanistan. The Roman occupation of Scotland was intended to be permanent, with Roman towns and the locals converted to Roman ways, but in the end it amounted to purely military occupation. There were no civitas (towns), grand villas, or civic infrastructure projects like aqueducts – only forts, marching camps, roads to facilitate the movement of troops, and defensive lines in the proverbial sand such as the Antonine Wall and Gask Ridge system west of Perth. Tribes who revolted against the Romans or who merely got in the way of conquest were subjected to brutal punitive campaigns and massacres.

The military nature of the occupation left little love lost between natives and invaders. Only a handful of dragonesque brooches, hallmarks of Romano-British culture, survive in the southeast at locations like Trimontium, one of the hubs of the invasion effort. In southern Scotland there are only the merest hints of anything resembling the entrenched Romano-British culture which emerged further south.

The blink of an eve

Locals in what is now the Scottish Borders, Lothians, and Dumfries and Galloway certainly traded with the Romans, while some tribes accepted bribes meant to keep them out of the way. The most famous example is the Traprain Treasure, a hoard of Roman silver hacked up and given to the Votadini tribe whose capital was atop the whaleback hill of Traprain Law in East Lothian.

The story of the Roman invasions of Scotland has captured imaginations for centuries despite only occurring for what is, in historical terms, the blink of an eye – around 140 years from first incursion to the final withdrawal. Increasingly, more scholarly and popular light is being shone not on the invaders, but on the native peoples who resisted them and who lived their lives with the shadow of the Empire looming over them.

This is the focus of the work being done by organisations including the Trimontium Trust in the Scottish Borders and the Scottish Crannog Centre in Perthshire. Both have many fantastic online resources where you can continue your journey of understanding the legacy of the Roman invasions of Scotland, and how – albeit for a brief time – they contributed to the Scotland we know today.

The Scottish Banner is pleased to be offering the Tartan of the Month series highlighting a variety of different, unique and colourful tartans from around the world which are registered with the Scottish Register of Tartans in Edinburgh. The Scottish Register of Tartans was established by an act of the Scottish Parliament in November 2008 and promotes and preserves information about historic and contemporary tartans from Scotland and throughout the world. Text and image use are courtesy of the Scottish Register of Tartans (SRT).

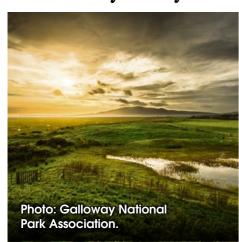

This tartan was organised by Kieron Colville to celebrate and honour the diversity, strength, and community of autistic individuals. It features 20 white threads woven through the pattern, representing the 20th anniversary of Number 6 – One Stop Shop for Autistic Adults, a vital service provided by Autism Initiatives Scotland. The tartan's colours were selected through a community survey led by Kieron, ensuring authentic representation. A yellow stripe is intended to symbolise 'Au', the chemical symbol for gold, which is used within the autism community as shorthand for autism in online and social spaces.

The tartan was launched in recognition of National Autism Acceptance Month in April. This tartan (reference: 14811) was designed by Kieron Colville and ScotlandShop and registered in May, 2025.

New National Park decision-No designation for Galloway and Ayrshire

Scottish Ministers have decided not to pursue a proposal to designate Galloway and Ayrshire as a National Park. Rural Affairs Secretary Mairi Gougeon confirmed that opposition to the nomination and the Reporter's recommendations against it meant that the region in southwest Scotland would not join the Cairngorms and Loch Lomond & the Trossachs as the country's third national park.

Speaking in the Scottish Parliament, Ms Gougeon said: "While there is substantial support for a National Park and what it could deliver for the southwest of Scotland, there is also significant opposition. I realise that this decision will be very disappointing for those who have been campaigning for a new National Park in Galloway over many years. I also recognise the huge amount of work and time that has been invested by a great many people throughout this process. The consultation raised some really important issues that local people care deeply about and we now have the opportunity to look at how we can address these. The Scottish Government remains committed to our existing National Parks and the vital leadership role that they play in tackling the climate and biodiversity crises, promoting sustainable land management and supporting the economic and social development of local communities. Our National Parks are achieving for people and nature."

The proposal to designate a new National Park in Galloway and Ayrshire was jointly put forward by the Galloway National Park Association and the Galloway and Southern Ayrshire UNESCO Biosphere, in response to the Scottish Government's invitation to communities and organisations across Scotland to nominate their area to be considered for designation as a new National Park. Five nominations were received through that process – from Galloway and Ayrshire, Lochaber, Loch Awe, Scottish Borders and Tay Forest.

Following an initial period of engagement with local communities, over 5,000 surveys were completed and more than 1,000 people attended events that were held across Galloway and South and East Ayrshire – with the final results showing around 54% of responses opposed the National Park proposal and around 42% of responses supported it.

Royal blessing for new frigate as HRH The Princess of Wales names HMS Glasgow

Her Royal Highness The Princess of Wales, Sponsor of HMS Glasgow, gave her blessing to the Royal Navy's newest warship. Smashing a bottle of whisky against the hull for good luck, Her Royal Highness formally named HMS Glasgow, the first of eight Type 26 frigates at the leading edge of naval warfare. To cheers from hundreds of friends, family, workers, VIP guests and the 45-strong ship's company at BAE Systems shipbuilding facility in Scotstoun, The Duchess of Rothesay, as she is known in Scotland, declared the time-honoured words: "I name this ship Glasgow. May God bless her and all who serve in her." Her Royal Highness was accompanied throughout her visit by The Prince of Wales. Proceedings opened with an inspection of the Royal Guard, followed by the 25-minute naming ceremony, during which Second Sea Lord Vice Admiral Sir Martin Connell thanked Their Royal Highnesses for their support and all those involved in the Type 26 endeavour to reach this milestone in the programme.

Vice Admiral Connell said: "From the first ever HMS Glasgow, sailing under the Royal Navy flag at the end of the 17thcentury to the ship we see here in the 21st century, HMS Glasgow has evolved and adapted to meet the warfighting and operational demands of its day. Each metamorphosis saw shipbuilders adapting materials and designs so that crews could operate each successive HMS Glasgow on operations and in conflict and war. The result of this being 11 battle honours -HMS Glasgow's pedigree is awe inspiring." He hailed the latest ship as "a pure-bred Anti-Submarine Warfare platform, setting the standard for naval warfare", ready to "meet the global and geopolitical challenges of today." He continued: "HMS Glasgow and her class represent the next chapter of naval innovation, safeguarding the UK's interests and contributing to national prosperity."Her Royal Highness accepted the honour of Royal Sponsor - historically, the title has served to bestow good luck and divine protection upon a ship - to HMS Glasgow four years ago. Although the Princess of Wales has hosted members of the Ship's Company at Windsor Castle, she had never seen the 8,000-tonne warship until the ship's launch.

Grand Prix win for Gaelic language drama An t-Eilean

MG ALBA has achieved a major international milestone, taking home the coveted Grand Prix at the Prix CIRCOM 2025 awards – the highest honour in the prestigious European television awards. The Grand Prix win was awarded to Black Camel Pictures' acclaimed Gaeliclanguage crime thriller An t-Eilean (The Island), which had already been named winner of the Drama and Entertainment category earlier in the evening at the gala award ceremony in Barcelona. In a surprise announcement, the series was also revealed as the overall winner across all genres.

Set against the elemental landscape of the Outer Hebrides, An t-Eilean (The Island) is a compelling crime story that follows a family caught up in a murder investigation very close to home. When their mother is found murdered in the family castle, four adult children return to the Scottish island of their birth as their father is questioned over her death. The drama premiered in the UK on BBC ALBA in January 2025, becoming the best performing Gaelic programme since the channel's inception.

David Smith, Director at Screen Scotland, said: "This is a fantastic win for the An t-Eilean team. The popularity of this ambitious series and the recognition it has received, including this award, is an incredible vote of confidence in the strength of Gaelic language drama." John Morrison, Chair of MG ALBA, added: "Winning a top European award from our television peers is wonderful news for An t-Eilean and for Gaelic language broadcasting. It shows that stories told in Gaelic can compete with the very best entertainment and drama across Europe."

Aberdeen city centre turned into a sea of red and white during Dons' parade

Around 100,000 Dons fans crowded Aberdeen city centre to watch the open-top bus parade by the first team after winning the Scottish Cup in May. Aberdeen Football Club supporters lined the streets to watch the parade as it made its way to the Town House for a balcony appearance by first team players with the Lord Provost of Aberdeen, Dr David Cameron. Led by Texo Deeside Caledonia pipe band, the parade started at Albyn Place, travelling down Union Street, Union Terrace, Schoolhill, and Broad Street going past the historic Marischal College before finishing at the Town House.

The Lord Provost said: "The Dons supporters created a fantastic atmosphere as the bus slowly made its way through the city centre – the streets were turned into a sea of red and white. The fans were singing and playing drums and, along with the pipe band, made the event into something very special for everyone. It was a fantastic and emotional occasion and a very fitting way to mark the Dons winning the Scottish Cup."

The Lord Provost also praised fans' behaviour as the event was very family-friendly with supporters of all ages turned out in the Aberdeen sunshine.

Bannockburn decision welcomed

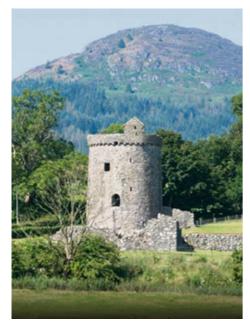

The National Trust for Scotland has welcomed the decision of Scottish Ministers to overturn planning permission for a horse-trotting track on the site of the historic Bannockburn battlefield. The Trust has previously asserted that the planning process had been flawed and that Stirling Council should not have approved the scheme, given its visual and other impacts on the historic battlefield.

The proposed trotting track, car parking, fencing and buildings, in green fields adjacent to the battlefield centre and parkland managed and cared for by the Trust, would have been directly visible from the Rotunda, which acts as a national monument to commemorate the 1314 battle which changed the course of Scottish history. Stirling Council approved the application in July last year despite many objections, and it was subsequently 'called in' by Scottish Ministers.

The Trust's Acting Director of Conservation & Policy, Diarmid Hearns, said: "This is very welcome news for the Trust and all who care about Scotland's heritage and history. Ministers' conclusions closely accord with our stated views that this development was simply in the wrong place and would have badly impacted upon the setting of the battlefield. We hope that this decision brings this matter to an end and that the developer withdraws to a new site elsewhere that will not impinge on places of historical importance."

Historic site in Dumfries and Galloway welcomes visitors once more.

rchardton Tower, a 15th century structure in Dumfries and Galloway, has reopened its doors following a series of high-level masonry inspections. Dating to the mid-1400s, Orchardton Tower is the only free-standing round tower of its type in Scotland. It operated as a fortified residence for a nobleman named John Cairns, who is thought to have built the structure in around 1455 and may have acquired the land after James II's overthrow of the Douglases. The name may suggest the existence of a nearby orchard.

Though historically similar spellings have also been used for the various places now called Urquhart – the latest scholarship regards these as sharing the same Celtic derivation, meaning 'settlement beside a small wood'.

A truly one-of-a-kind

Rosie Thorp, District Visitor and Community Manager for Dumfries and Galloway at Historic Environment Scotland (HES), said: "We're thrilled to be welcoming visitors back to Orchardton Tower, where they can delve into the history of late medieval noble life. Nestled in a beautiful part of the Dumfries and Galloway landscape, and the only surviving near free-standing late medieval circular tower in the country, this is a truly one-of-a-kind part of our built heritage and an asset in telling Scotland's story."

The High-Level Masonry Programme is the result of ongoing risk assessment and sample surveys and assesses the impact of climate change on sites as well as the scale of deterioration caused by a number of other factors, including the materials used in the building's construction, its age and physical location. Whilst this is not an issue unique to Scotland, HES is believed to be amongst the first heritage managers to approach it in this way, with the results shared with peer organisations.

From 1 April to 30 September, Orchardton tower is open every day from 9:30am – 6:30pm. From 1 October to 31 March, the site is open Saturday to Wednesday (closed Thursday and Friday) from 9:30am – 4:30pm. Entry to the site is free of charge.

900 years of Edinburgh's historic treasures to be celebrated in new digital exhibition new online exhibition launched by the City of Edinburgh Council's Museums & Galleries, Libraries and ▲Archives services brings together 900 years of objects relating to Edinburgh. From Greyfriars Bobby's collar to the National Covenant, visitors to a digital exhibition can see all kinds of fantastic objects and artworks and find out more about their stories. Edinburgh 900: Objects from Nine Centuries of City Life is hosted on the Capital Collections website. It showcases not only some of the treasures viewable in museum and gallery venues around the city, but also many items that have never been fully shared with the public before.

These include a 19th century record of petty criminals, a rare Hearts and Hibs football programme, beautiful contemporary silver and ceramics and historic documents from as early as the 12th century. The exhibition launched in May with the first 20 objects, with new objects being released each month until September, when the City's Edinburgh 900 celebrations officially conclude.

A real celebration of Edinburgh's past and present

The team behind the exhibition have not only been photographing and researching these amazing treasures, they've also been engaging with community groups across the city to capture their responses to them. Groups including MindRoom who work with neurodiverse young people and dementiafriendly group Art In the City, have been connecting with the objects and having their responses recorded for display in the digital exhibition. This work is in partnership with the Open University who have provided the interactive digital app technology to capture community responses.

Lord Provost Robert Aldridge said: "Edinburgh 900 is a year-long celebration of our city's rich history, culture, and bright future. It's incredible to see the diversity of historic objects cared for on behalf of the city all viewable together online. I'm sure viewers are going to really enjoy seeing the tiny historic details the photographs reveal, as well as diving into the background stories and responses from the community. It's a real celebration of Edinburgh's past and present." A small display in the City Art Centre foyer showcasing some of the objects included in the online exhibition will also be on display in the summer.

Celebrating 50 years of the PS Waverley preservation

2025 marks the incredible 50th anniversary of the PS Waverley's first sailing in preservation. Waverley is the world's last seagoing paddle steamer and named after Sir Walter Scott's Waverley novels. The Scottish Banner spoke with Douglas McGowan MBE, President of the Paddle Steamer Preservation Society, on this milestone year for one of Scotland's most iconic and historic vessels to have ever sailed.

Douglas for those that do not know, can you tell us a bit about the history of the iconic PS Waverley?

DM: The Waverley was built in 1946 on the Clyde for the London and North Eastern Railway Company to replace the previous Waverley which was sunk by enemy action at Dunkirk in 1940. She was built primarily for the Craigendoran to Loch Goil and Loch Long service, calling at Arrochar to connect with the Loch Lomond paddle steamer Maid of the Loch. During her career in public ownership, she was also used at peak periods to assist on the main ferry routes such as Wemyss Bay-Rothesay and Gourock-Dunoon.

The Waverley had become not only the last Clyde paddle steamer but the world's last seagoing paddle steamer.

She lost her striking red white and black funnels with nationalisation of the Clyde steamer fleet in 1948 when her funnels became buff with a black top. During the 1950's and 60's and up until 1972, she was owned and operated by the Caledonian Steam Packet Company mainly on a variety of Clyde cruises but in 1973, the CSP Co was amalgamated with MacBraynes to become Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd (CalMac). The new funnel colours to reflect this change of ownership became red with a black top and red lion rampants on the sides of the funnels. By this time, Waverley had become unique in her maritime status: she was now the world's last seagoing paddle steamer.

You were involved in the Paddle Steamer Preservation Society purchasing the Waverley for just £1 in 1974. Can you tell us how this came about and what it was like to receive such an offer and what do you think would have happened if the Society had not taken on the Waverley?

DM: My colleague Terry Sylvester and I, representing the Paddle Steamer Preservation Society, had struck up a good relationship with the General Manager of CalMac. From 1970, we had various meetings at their Head Office at Gourock, suggesting various ways to improve the marketing and public awareness of Waverley as a unique vessel within their fleet. Several of our proposals were implemented and a mutual trust and respect grew between us. For example, we suggested they paint the funnels a different colour from the rest of their fleet of car ferries. They also painted the paddleboxes black: both of these initiatives were suggested to improve standout from the rest of their fleet.

However at the end of the 1973 season, as we expected, Waverley was withdrawn from service as she was losing money and required considerable expenditure on her boiler, paddle wheels and timber decks. I received a phone call from the CalMac General Manager in November 1973 asking if I could attend a meeting in his office.

I expected the worst......to be told "thank you for all your efforts in supporting us to keep the Waverley sailing but sadly, we have to take her out of service and sell her to the highest bidder." The evening before that fateful meeting, Terry phoned to tell me that he wouldn't be joining me at the meeting. "I don't see much point in travelling all the way from south Wales to Gourock just to be presented with the ship's bell as a memento."

And so, it was just the two of us at that meeting. Looking back now, 52 years on, it certainly was a surreal moment when I was told that CalMac's parent company, the Scottish Transport Group, had decided that in view of all the support and assistance offered to CalMac, their Board had decided to gift this historic ship to our preservation society (PSPS). You could have knocked me down with a feather! At first, I thought it was a wind up! A 700-ton paddle steamer which had a passenger certificate (then) for 1,350 passengers.....as a gift! But, then came the bad news, "You will have to give us £1 to make the deal legal!" I phoned Terry that evening and told him "Well, you were absolutely right, they want to give us the ship's bell BUT they are giving us the rest of the ship as well!'

The rest as they say is history. But had we declined this amazing "Paddler for a Pound" offer, she would have been sold to the highest bidder....and that could have resulted in razor blades! Perish the thought!

The Waverley is synonymous with sailing down the Clyde and "Doon the Watter". What is it about the magic of Waverley do you feel have captured the imagine of generations of Scots?

DM: The Waverley had become not only the last Clyde paddle steamer but the world's last seagoing paddle steamer. In the early 1970's, the PSPS proactively marketed her as a very special ship. The cruise down the river Clyde to Dunoon, Rothesay and the famous Kyles of Bute has been loved by generations of Glaswegians and became known as "Doon the Watter". When Waverley became the "last of the line" she was synonymous with this special voyage that their parents and Grandparents had done before them, keeping the tradition very much alive.

There is something magical about leaving the narrow confines of the River Clyde in Glasgow and 2 hours later experiencing the beautiful scenery of the Firth of Clyde.

Waverley's maiden voyage was on June 16, 1947. Waverley has been lovingly restored with new decks, cabins and engines over the years. What features of the ship are you most proud of and why?

DM: The Waverley has to comply with all modern regulations which includes an annual drydocking. Her amazing original 1947 triple expansion engines are at the very heart of Waverley. I'm very proud of playing my part in her preservation and when I see Fathers with their captivated sons and daughters watching these cranks whirling round and taking in the intoxicating aroma of hot oil and steam, yes, I say to myself it's all been worthwhile!

2025 marks the 50th anniversary since the Waverley's first sailing in preservation. Can you tell us what special events are planned during this milestone year, and did you ever envisage marking 50 incredible years of service?

DM: It is quite amazing to think that Waverley is celebrating 50 years as a preserved steamer this year and carried over 6 million happy passengers in the process! Looking back to 1975, our first year of operating Waverley, we did have a number of unexpected operating issues to deal with. There were some days when I thought we'd be doing well to keep her going for 50 days, never mind 50 years!

We are marking our 50th anniversary with calls at "new" piers for the first time such as Salen on the Isle of Mull and Rochester in Kent. Piers need the Waverley and Waverley needs piers!

There is currently an ongoing project to have Helensburgh pier reopened. The Waverley's survival over 50 years is due to a very large band of mainly volunteers from all walks of life who have regularly given their time and sometimes money to help keep those paddles turning. We are inviting them on a special cruise during the summer to thank them.

This year PS Waverley will visit 74 ports and piers around the UK. How does it make you feel that you have been part of a team of people who have allowed millions of people to enjoy the Waverley over the years? Also how does it make you feel to see so many people still wanting to be part of this unique piece of Scottish maritime history?

DM: Even after 70 years of sailing aboard the good ship Waverley, I still get a thrill when I go up that gangway!

I'm immediately immersed in a different world, a world of relaxation, sea air, and the reassuring steady beat of the paddles. Sheer nectar! But most of all, what really makes me proud is seeing happy families on deck on a summer's day, children totally animated and having fun, whether it's having a tasty portion of fish and chips in the dining saloon, watching those hypnotic engines doing their stuff or Mum and Dad enjoying a relaxing refreshment in the Jeanie Deans lounge. We are in the entertainment industry, and it does my heart good seeing people having a great day out. Above all, Waverley is not stuffed and mounted in a museum, she is a living thing, alive and well, paddles thrashing, engines whirling round, that unique steam whistle sounding and happy passengers!

It is a real credit to the entire Waverley team that she is still sailing in 2025. How important, and difficult, is it for the Society to continue to keep the world's last seagoing paddle steamer in service?

DM: There are many challenges associated with maintaining a 1947 paddle steamer in service. Health and Safety and new regulations play a major part, all of which cost money. Often, new specialised replacement parts have to be specially made, sometimes by our own engineering team. And we are very fortunate to have an excellent management team led by a very passionate General Manager. In addition, the Board of Directors of both Waverley Steam Navigation company (the Waverley's owner) and Waverley Excursions (the Waverley's operator) offer full support behind the scenes. In recent years, our marketing team have been very proactive on social media which has brought to Waverley an entirely new audience.

And finally, Douglas you have such a strong connection to the Waverley there must be some incredible stories to tell? Can you share with any personal highlights you have experienced with your association to the world's last seagoing paddle steamer?

DM: Our first sailing on 22nd May 1975 with specially invited guests was very memorable. We had succeeded in returning the Waverley to service as a preserved vessel! Bringing both our baby daughters on board for the first time was rather special and even today, all those years later, they still love the Waverley. And we now have 5 proud Grandchildren, who simply delight on coming aboard "Papa's boat"!

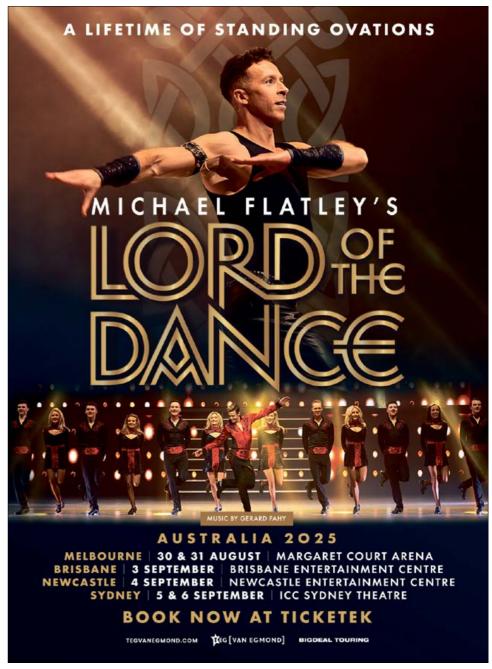

But the culmination of my full time 34 career in the chocolate industry merging with the Waverley arrived when I was appointed President of the Confectioners Benevolent Fund in 2001 with a special Dinner at the National Maritime Museum at Greenwich. Waverley transported the 350 guests, the great and the good from the UK's confectionery industry from London's Tower Pier to Greenwich. Over the years, I have had the privilege of meeting many celebrities, MP's, Mayors and Councillors on board and shaken several thousand hands!

Probably the biggest but most unexpected accolade of all was receiving the MBE in the 2017 New Years Honours from Prince Charles (as he was then) at Buckingham Palace. An amazing day enjoyed by myself, my wife Jean and my two daughters Lynn and Jan.

- 31 Cigarette advertising banned on television in Britain. 1965

uring renovations, an exceptionally rare Victorian Crossley engine, was found tucked away in the attic of CoDE The Court, where it had remained hidden for decades. It is now on display in The Lost Close, the underground vaults of the building. Built in 1878, this marvel of Victorian engineering, it was far ahead of its time, used to regulate the temperature of the Edinburgh Police Chambers, and its survival offers a rare glimpse into 19th century innovation.

One of the most exciting finds in Scotland

Remarkably, this engine is the second-oldest surviving Crossley four-stroke engine in the world and the oldest in Europe. Only two other examples exist, the oldest is housed at the Henry Ford Museum in Michigan, USA, and another in Denmark. Its discovery, in near original condition, by founder Andrew Landsburgh, adds a significant chapter to Britain's industrial heritage. It's unclear whether the engine was newly installed in the building or a second-hand acquisition. Adding to the intrigue, research revealed a royal connection. In the 1800s, Edinburgh Police Chambers and Balmoral Castle, the Royal Family's Scottish residence, had the same system installed; adding to the royal connection, this rediscovered engine had originally been installed in the short lived "Royal Aquarium" at Waverley, before being moved to the police chambers in 1881 where it was installed for the purpose of ventilation.

Andrew Landsburgh, Director and Founder of CoDE Concepts, said "This is one of the most exciting finds in Scotland. We found it during The Court's renovation, posted a photo online not knowing what we had, and suddenly experts from around the world were contacting us telling us we'd uncovered something incredible. What began as a refurbishment turned into the discovery of a vital piece of Edinburgh, and the world's industrial heritage.

This engine connects us directly to Scotland's innovative past and the very beginnings of technology which still powers the modern world. We've brought it down from the attic to The Lost Close, the underground vaults of the building, where visitors can experience this historic find firsthand."

A piece of engineering history

The story of this extraordinary discovery also featured in the documentary Potential Energy, which delves into how the engine was found, its relocation from the attic to The Lost Close, underground vaults of the building and the possibilities of restoring it for modern use. The engine is currently on display at The Lost Close. To mark this discovery, The Lost Close is launched the Scottish Innovations Tour, exploring the country's contributions to innovation and industry. Visitors will journey through The Lost Close, now the permanent home of the Crossley 'Otto Silent' engine, and uncover Edinburgh's role in shaping global technological progress.

James Armandary, Tourism Development Lead of The Lost Close, said "This is an incredibly exciting addition to The Lost Close. It's not every day you uncover a piece of engineering history that bridges the gap between Scotland's past innovations and technology we take for granted today. This building continues to surprise us with its storied history and with the launch of the Scottish Innovations Tour, visitors will not only be able to see the engine up close but also explore Edinburgh's long-overlooked role in shaping global industry."

The Lost Close, hidden for nearly two centuries beneath layers of rubble from the Great Fire, was also rediscovered during renovations in 2019. Lost Close was originally the vault for the first purposebuilt bank in Scotland. The underground space beneath the old courthouse is now home to events such as whisky, gin and beer tasting, as well as historical storytelling.

IN THE SCOTTISH KITCHEN

Veggie burger

Ingredients:

6 burger buns

3-4 tbsp. olive oil
1 onion, peeled, thinly sliced
250g/9oz firm tofu, finely chopped
1 cooked beetroot (not in vinegar), peeled, grated
150g/5½oz fried mushrooms, drained
1 carrot, peeled, grated
1 tsp smoked paprika
1 garlic clove, peeled, crushed
1 tsp chopped fresh thyme
1 tbsp. chopped kidney beans
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
To serve:

6 tbsp. ready-made mayonnaise (optional) 3 beefsteak tomatoes, thickly sliced 2-3 gherkins/pickles, sliced

Method:

Heat 1-2 tablespoons of the olive oil in a pan over a medium-low heat and fry the onions for 15 minutes, stirring frequently, or until they are softened and golden-brown. In a bowl, mix together the cooked onions, tofu, beetroot, mushrooms, carrots, smoked paprika, garlic, thyme and kidney beans. Season, to taste, with salt and freshly ground black pepper.

With damp hands, divide the mixture into approximately 150g/5oz portions and shape into patties. Heat the remaining olive oil in a frying pan and fry the patties for 3-4 minutes on both sides, or until golden-brown. Heat a griddle pan until smoking, then add the patties and fry for a further 1-2 minutes on both sides, or until there are deep char lines on both sides. To serve, place the patties into burger buns and arrange over the toppings of your choice.

Arran potato salad

Ingredients:

10 waxy potatoes, diced 4 ounces (100g) shelled fresh peas (can be frozen peas)

4 ounces cooked beetroot (red beets) diced Salt and freshly ground black pepper Two teaspoons chopped onion One teaspoon chopped fresh parsley Four tablespoons (60ml) salad dressing or salad cream

Fresh parsley to garnish

Method:

Boil the potatoes in salted water for ten minutes or until tender. Drain and pat dry. Cook the peas separately for about five minutes or until tender and then drain.

While the vegetables are still warm, mix together and stir in the chopped parsley and onion and season with salt and pepper to taste. Fold in the salad dressing (or salad cream) to moisten, and garnish with sprigs of fresh parsley.

Apple crumble

Ingredients:

For the crumble:

 $300g/10\frac{1}{2}$ oz. plain flour, sieved pinch of salt

175g/6oz. unrefined brown sugar 200g/7oz. unsalted butter, cubed at room temperature

Knob of butter for greasing

For the filling:

450g/1lb. apples, peeled, cored and cut into 1cm/½in pieces 50g/2oz. unrefined brown sugar 1 tbsp. plain flour 1 pinch of ground cinnamon

Method:

Preheat the oven to 180C/350F/Gas 4. Place the flour and sugar in a large bowl and mix well. Taking a few cubes of butter at a time rub into the flour mixture.

Keep rubbing until the mixture resembles breadcrumbs. Place the fruit in a large bowl and sprinkle over the sugar, flour and cinnamon. Stir well being careful not to break up the fruit. Butter a 24cm/9in ovenproof dish. Spoon the fruit mixture into the bottom, then sprinkle the crumble mixture on top. Bake in the oven for 40-45 minutes until the crumble is browned and the fruit mixture bubbling. Serve with thick cream or custard.

Orange cranachan

Ingredients:

4 blush or blood oranges 50g/2 oz. pinhead oatmeal or rolled oats 150ml/5fl oz. pot whipping cream 2 tbsp. whisky 150g/5oz. tub Greek yogurt 2 tbsp. clear honey Honey

Method:

Slice the top and bottom off each orange and sit them on a board. Using a sharp knife, cut down between the peel and flesh until all the peel and pith have been removed. Cut between each membrane to remove all the segments. Roughly chop and set aside. Heat a non-stick frying pan over a medium heat. Dry-fry the oatmeal, stirring often, for 3-5 mins. It should start to smell nutty, but don't let it burn. Tip the oatmeal onto a plate to cool. Whisk the cream and whisky together to soft peaks.

Carefully fold in the yogurt, oatmeal and honey until just combined. Spoon half the mixture into 4 serving glasses and top with half the orange. Repeat layer with the remaining ingredients and serve drizzled with extra honey, if you like.

Scottish Oatcakes

Ingredients:

4oz/125g medium oatmeal, plus extra for kneading ½ tsp. bicarbonate of soda Pinch salt 2 tsps. melted fat (goose or bacon) 1 tbsp. hot water

Method:

Preheat the oven to Gas5/375F/190C. In a large bowl mix together the oatmeal, salt and bicarbonate of soda. Then drizzle in the melted fat and stir vigorously to a thick paste. Cut the paste into two small balls, sprinkle a work surface with oatmeal and roll each ball on the surface to coat and to prevent sticking. Knead each ball for a few minutes until the mixture starts to dry slightly and stops sticking to the surface.

Add a little more oatmeal as required. Roll each ball into a 1/4 thick disc, then cut into quarters. Place on a greased baking sheet and bake for 30 minutes in the oven or until brown at the edges. Alternatively, the oatcakes can be cooked in a hot frying pan, 3 minutes on each side.

Jock Collins

Ingredients:

Scotch whisky 5-6 dashes of lemon juice Sugar syrup Soda

Method:

Pour into a large glass and fill with soda.

Tickets on sale for CelticFest 2025

arly bird adult weekend tickets are now available for CelticFest 2025, to be held in Warwick, the Celtic Capital of Queensland, at the Warwick Showgrounds on Saturday 4 October and Sunday 5 October. Available until sold out, the $50 early bird adult weekend tickets are the cheapest way to get to CelticFest, the largest Celtic festival in Queensland. Once they're gone, they're gone - don't miss out, and make sure your family and friends don't miss out either. City visitors are encouraged to #GetTheirCountryCelticOn at this year's event, with CelticFest celebrating the region's rich Celtic heritage while also providing a taste of Queensland country. And with CelticFringe events on offer from Friday 3 October, CelticFest patrons will just have to stay the whole weekend to fully immerse themselves in the Celtic in the Country experience!

Celtic entertainment

The highly-anticipated ticketed CelticFest event, which in 2023 attracted over 10,000

attendances, will bring back favourites such as the Australian Highland Games Championships – caber toss, anyone? The Gathering Irish band, highland cows from Keans Agri Leyburn Highland Stud, the Medieval Arena, knights in single combat and pitched battles, pipe band and dancing displays, Irish dancing, Celtic-themed markets, Celtic animals, the gathering of the clans, Celtic-inspired bar and food - and much more!

There'll also be camp-drafting and Australian Light Horse displays in the Main Arena, giving the event that real 'Queensland country' feel. CelticFest 2025 will run over two days, with a full program of music on the Main Stage on both Saturday and Sunday. Saturday night is CelticFest Party Night, with The Gathering Irish band headlining a night of footstomping, rock-on Celtic music on the Main Stage, and the Darling Downs Irish Club hosting a ceili (Celtic bush dance) in the Doug Feez Pavilion. Supporting acts and other program inclusions will be announced over the coming months.

CelticFest will also again host the Australian Highland Games Championships, and visitors can watch professional strongmen and women as they perform many feats of strength, including putting the stone, the farmer's walk, and the perennially popular caber toss. The medieval village will be open for CelticFest attendees to stroll through, providing a window into a bygone era, including combat between knights of through history, and the daily life of those who lived in feudal times. Visitors will also be able to watch displays from roaming entertainers - including pipe bands, the graceful Women in History and tribal bellydancers - and highland dancers, marvel at the gloriously gentle Highland cows, wander through Celtic-themed markets, trace their genealogy, and feast on Celticthemed food and drink.

CelticFringe

CelticFringe events return in 2025; these are events which are separately organised and ticketed (where applicable) by local businesses and community organisations and they will be held in a variety of venues in Warwick and around the Southern Downs.

CelticFringe music events include Australian Celtic Women 'craicing' the CelticFest weekend open with a featurelength concert at the Club Warwick RSL on Friday 3 October, and CelticFest visitors can also #GetYourCountryCelticOn with Limerick MCB performing at the Sandy Creek Pub. Meanwhile Highlander Celtic Rock Band will give a rousing show at the closing CelticFest weekend concert on Sunday 5 October - also at Club Warwick RSL. The Southern Downs Explorer Heritage train will run a tour to Clifton and Greenmount on Friday 3 October and, on a sporting note, Warwick parkrun will host a Celtic-themed parkrun on the banks of the Condamine River on Saturday 4 October – including a kilted dash! More CelticFringe events will be Earlybird adult CelticFest weekend tickets are now available for $50 from the CelticFest website at https://www.celticfestqld.com. au/tickets, until sold out, after which online pricing applies. There is no senior or pensioner pricing, however children under 18 go free. A new ticket type this year is a separate CelticFest Party Night ticket for Saturday evening only; but CelticFest Party Night is also included in the Saturday and weekend tickets. In addition, three-night campsite-only passes are available from the CelticFest website, priced at $90; all campers will also need to separately purchase CelticFest weekend tickets.

Rare polygamy saga playing out at Tweed Valley Ospreys Project

sprey watchers are being treated to a rarely seen - and possibly never before captured on film – polygamy saga playing out at a nest in the Tweed Valley. Forestry and land Scotland (FLS) cameras are capturing in real time the fascinating behaviour of two female ospreys and one male who have set up a home as a trio – a form of polygamy known as polygyny with a male breeding with multiple females.

Fascinating insight

The cameras set up as part of The Tweed Valley Osprey Project are providing a fascinating insight into the natural behaviour between the adult birds – Mrs O, a female who has previously nested at the site and a new female and young male - as the partnership and nesting behaviour develops during the season. Tweed Valley Osprey Project Co-ordinator, Diane Bennett said: "So far things are looking good. The females seem amicable and tolerant with both having mated with the male bird and laying four eggs between them. The only tension witnessed so far has been on the arrival of a fish delivery from the male as the two females both make a grab it. Mrs O usually wins the fish and flies off to feed but has been seen to return with a portion remaining and letting the other female have it. This nest behaviour with all the birds in the same nest is very rare and as far as we know it is the first time this has ever been on a livestream camera with most other research involving such a set-up previously conducted though distant observation. Getting to watch this saga close up as the season unfolds is exciting both for the drama but also for the important research insights it will allow."

Safe places

The background and identity of the new arrivals is unclear as while they both have British Trust for Ornithology (BTO) rings to generate information on the survival, productivity and movements of bird, they are not fitted with coloured, alphanumeric Darvic rings that allows researchers to identify individual birds. The Tweed Valley Osprey viewing centre at Glentress is accessible to all users. Ospreys have been coming to breed here since the 1990s and the project - funded and managed by FLS and supported by a team of volunteers - aims to protect and provide safe places for them to settle and nest. Sadly, the four chicks which hatched in the nest have died from starvation. The Tweed Valley polygyny saga can be viewed at the Wildlife Hub at Glentress Forest in Peebles between 10am-4pm each day, where the camera is streaming live onto the big screen, with volunteers on duty most of the time, to interpret what is happening with the osprey family.

Regular updates and video clips of behaviour and snapshots of the birds taken from the livestream are added to Tweed Valley Osprey Project Facebook Page which can be followed, to see how they progress though the season at: www.facebook.com/tweedvalleyospreyproject

abhal Mòr Ostaig, the National Centre for Gaelic Language and Culture has launched Scotland's first-ever Gaelic Poetry Path.

Slighe nam Bàrd will provide a poetic pathway around the Isle of Skye, aiming to introduce local, national, and international visitors to a taste of Gaelic heritage, song, and poetry. Tourists are now able to collect a free Slighe nam Bàrd - Poetry Paths pamphlet and accompanying map from Sabhal Mòr Ostaig, located in Sleat in the Isle of Skye.

The pamphlet will provide a detailed guide around Skye's stunning landscape, stopping at seven major locations connected to a Gaelic song or poem. A QR code for each location provides a recording of the poem/song to enable people to listen to the Gaelic audio in the environment that inspired the creative piece.

Skye's poetic Gaelic landscape

Abigail Burnyeat, Head of Research at Sabhal Mòr Ostaig, the National Centre for Gaelic Language and Culture, said: "People often come to Skye for its beautiful scenery, but the aim of Slighe nam Bàrd is to showcase the connection between Gaelic culture and Skye's mesmerising landscape. Through Slighe nam Bàrd, tourists will be able to engage with the landscape whilst listening to Gaelic poems and songs that add to our understanding of the locations on the trail, giving people an opportunity to experience for themselves the Gaelic culture and history at the heart of the Isle of Skye."

Meg Bateman, Professor in Gaelic Language and Culture at Sabhal Mòr Ostaig and Bàrd a' Chomuinn Ghàidhealaich, added: "Slighe nam Bàrdprovides a one-day poetic roadtrip around the Isle of Skye, allowing people to engage with local Gaelic poetry whilst immersed in the Skye landscape. The pathway consists of seven poems/songs, each one carefully chosen to represent a range of locations, centuries, styles, and subjects to give a full flavour of Skye's poetic Gaelic landscape. From Somhairle MacGill-Eain to Màiri Mhòr nan Òran, the pathway will guide people from the south of the island to the very north, discovering Gaelic poetry along the lasgow's medieval roots have been commemorated in stone as part of a project to preserve its history and provide valuable hands-on experience for stonemasonry students in the city. The Port Stones Project, part of the year-long celebrations commemorating Glasgow's 850th birthday, mark the city's rich history by placing four stone markers at the approximate locations of the original medieval city gates.

In collaboration with the Merchants House, Trades House, and City of Glasgow College, the project is a unique endeavour that honours Glasgow's past and engages young people in preserving this heritage, while working on a practical project with valuable learning opportunities.

Glasgow's history

The project involved the design and production of the port stones by students from the City of Glasgow. Each stone, designed by construction apprentices, after discussions with students and senior pupils as part of the college's Schools' Partnership Programme, incorporates Glasgow City

Council's coat of arms as well as the crests of Trades House and Merchants House of Glasgow, Glasgow Dean of Guild Court Trust and City of Glasgow College. Bethan Baillie from Cathkin High School, said; "It was amazing to be part of something that marks Glasgow's history in such a permanent way. We had a look at old maps, talked about the layout of the stones, and discussed where they were going - and now people will see our work as part of the city."

Each Caithness stone marker is also engraved with a compass point denoting the 'port gate', the Glasgow 850 logo, a brief historical description and the year it was laid. Blending traditional skills with modern laser cutting technology modern apprentices painstakingly cut individual pieces, with precision, to form the full flagstones. Callan, a first-year stonemasonry apprentice at the college, said; "Getting to be involved in the cutting of these stones for the city's 850th was a proud moment. It's not every day you work on something that's going to stand in Glasgow for generations. It really brought home why I chose this trade."

Medieval city gates

Medieval Glasgow ran from the River Clyde, up through the Saltmarket, along High Street and up to the Cathedral. The historical locations for the stones, installed by the council, are based on the approximate sites of the original medieval city gates. These locations were chosen based on historical documents and maps, including the Medieval City Map: Glasgow's Medieval City development between 1150 and 1550 produced by Glasgow City Council in conjunction with West of Scotland Archaeology Service.

Lord Provost of Glasgow, Jacqueline McLaren, said; "This project symbolises the unity and collaboration of three historic civic institutions in Glasgow, and one that reflects a shared commitment to civic pride and legacy. Together, with the College, this project has allowed the students to contribute something tangible in this special year – something that they can be proud of and that can be enjoyed by residents and visitors alike."

The Glasgow 850 celebrations mark a significant milestone in the city's history, commemorating 850 years since Glasgow was granted burgh status, in 1175. The year-long programme includes a variety of events and activities designed to engage and inspire people of all ages, reflecting Glasgow's dynamic past, present, and future.

The revival of Scotland's legendary Whisky Coast

eading tourism and whisky experts have revealed their hopes for an enriching and sustainable revival of Scotland's legendary Whisky Coast, once home to the 'Whisky Capital of the World'. Plans for over 13 new distilleries, as well as a number of innovative new whisky experiences and hotels, have recently been unveiled across Argyll and the Isles – an area which encompasses four of Scotland's recognised whisky regions - Campbeltown (once known as the Whisky Capital of the World), Islay, Highlands (Oban and Loch Lomond) and Islands (Jura and Tobermory).

Recognising the significance of this, Cathy Craig, CEO of the Argyll and Isles Tourism Cooperative said: "Whisky, or Uisge Beatha has shaped communities and culture throughout Argyll and the Isles for centuries, so it is incredibly exciting to hear it could continue to do so in the future with so many planned new developments offering a worldclass whisky experience across the region and existing businesses diversifying to offer new visitor experiences. These will be a fantastic addition to our year-round whisky calendar. Already known as Scotland's Whisky Coast due the high volume of world-class distilleries dotted along our coastline, this would give visitors so many more immersive ways to learn more about our important whisky heritage and why our destination, with its abundance of fertile landscapes, produces some of Scotland's finest food and drink."

Renowned whisky author and Master of the Quaich Charlie Maclean added: "These developments are potentially massively significant for Argyll and the Isles. Whisky production in Argyll peaked in the nineteenth century when there were thirty-four distilleries producing some two-hundred thousand gallons a year, so with all the new developments, the area could be reaching or at least matching an all-time high."

New whisky experiences
New whisky themed visitor experiences in Argyll & the Isles include:

- Ardbeg House (new for 2025) Opening in September, Ardbeg House will offer visitors 'the ultimate whisky and hospitality experience' on the Isle of Islay, Ardbeg's island home. Inspired by the island's wild and untamed landscape, this stunning new hotel celebrates the spirit of Islay and the legendary stories of Ardbeg and its whiskies. Ardbeg House brings together the best of Islay's offerings both on the plate and in the glass.
- Whisky and Waves (new for 2026) This new sailing tour operator is launching a wide range of whisky and sailing cruises aboard their 40ft yacht. Sailing from Oban's North Pier and Tobermory on the Isle of Mull, each cruise will feature a complimentary whisky tasting experience showcasing some the very best single malts that Scotland's Whisky Coast has to offer. Experiences include a 'Sail and Sip' Whisky Distillery Crawl. Speaking about his new venture, founder Michael Sharkey said: "We're thrilled to be setting sail with our new whisky adventures in 2026. It will be a fantastic year for Scotland's Whisky Coast as we see some of the new distilleries take shape and The Clipper Race returns to Oban. Guests sailing with us will be given a chance to get a taste of the best of both worlds, enjoyed responsibly under our expert guidance."
- · Island Nights, Whisky Flights at Another Place, The Machrie (new for 2025) - Another Place, The Machrie on Islay, renowned the world over for its championship golf and great food and drink, has launched a new whisky experience in partnership with progressive B Corp distillery Bruichladdich, which itself was revived in 2000. The new two-night escape gives whisky lovers the chance to immerse themselves in the spirited heritage of Islay whisky. Guests will enjoy a guided tour of the Hebridean distillery, which is home to Bruichladdich, Port Charlotte and Octomore single malt whiskies, as well as The Botanist (Islay's first dry gin). As well as enjoying all that the island has to offer, guests can sample a complementary dram in their room - the perfect Islay nightcap. Speaking about the new experience Judi Blakeburn, chief commercial officer at Another Place, The Machrie said: "Ensuring our guests enjoy memorable experiences that authentically showcase the island's unique heritage, and the importance of protecting wild settings is at the heart of what we do. So, we're very pleased to be working with one of the island's most progressive distilleries to offer guests a new experience that will take them to the heart of Scotland's whisky isle."

 The Wee Still at Oban Distillery (new for 2025) - Nestling beneath the steep cliff that overlooks Oban, one of Scotland's oldest sources of Single Malt Scotch Whisky has opened a new bar for 2025.
 A great way to conclude a tour of their working distillery, where visitors can learn about the whisky-making process, stopping at the production area, old filling store and dram room along the way.

Published proposals highlight plans for 13 new distilleries across Argyll and the Isles, including three in Campbeltown, six on Islay, one at Luss on the Banks of Loch Lomond, one at Inveraray Castle, and one in Ardrishaig, a coastal village on Loch Gilp.

Scotland's Whisky Coast

This complements the destination's year-round programme of whisky experiences. Highlighting another way in which Argyll and the Isles is unique as a whisky destination, whisky enthusiast, founder of World Whisky Day (in May each year) and author of The Pocket Guide to Whisky, Blair Bowman said: "Argyll and the Isles encompasses four of Scotland's recognised whisky regions, earning it the title of Scotland's Whisky Coast. Whisky is quite literally known in Scottish Gaelic as the Water of Life, uisge beatha, which is very apt. There is something magical about each and every sip. When you pick up a glass from Argyll and the Isles, you're not just picking up a drink, you're picking up a story of Scottish life too. It tells you story of history, a story of culture and a story of craftmanship – from the farmers producing barley to the unique distillation processes."

Argyll and Bute Council Leader Jim Lynch added: "Argyll and Bute is well known for its outstanding food and drink sector, and if these new developments come to fruition, they will provide a welcome boost to the area and the local economy. We already have more than 20 distilleries in Argyll and Bute producing world-class whisky, gin, and rum products. From largescale companies to small micro-distillers, this fast-growing market creates muchneeded employment and makes a valuable contribution to the local, Scottish and UK economies. In addition to new distilleries and visitor experiences, several existing distilleries in Campbeltown, Mull, Oban, and Islay are continuing to sustainably expand production, improve visitor facilities and develop pioneering approaches to sustainability and environmental responsibility. It is fantastic to see such innovation and growth happening right here on our doorstep."

To plan a world class food and drink experience on Scotland's Whisky Coast visit: https://www.wildaboutargyll.co.uk/eat-and-drink

Did you know?

- According to the Scotch Whisky Association, 13 distilleries have opened across the whole of Scotland in the past five years.
- Argyll and the Isles is currently home to 20 distilleries producing world-class whisky and gin products.
- At its peak in the nineteenth century, Argyll was home to more than 30 distilleries. This figure could be matched if all the proposed developments go ahead.
- Oban Distillery, perched on the picturesque harbour, is one of Scotland's smallest distilleries.
- For many, the ultimate whisky experience is a trip to Islay. This tiny wee island boasts nine working distilleries, producing whiskies that truly reflect their environment with a characteristic peaty flavour and a hint of salty air and seaweed.
- Campbeltown was once the 'Whisky Capital of the World' and home to 34 whisky distilleries now just three remain. Kilkerran Distillery which opened in 2004 - the first distillery to open in Campbeltown for over 125 years.
- Single-malt Scotch whisky is special in provenance, heritage, production and taste. Made by a unique process of distillation and maturation, only whisky distilled in Scotland can claim the exclusive title of Scotch.
